such courts have power to issue writs of certiorari,⁶⁹ and other original and remedial writs,⁷⁰ and to hear and determine the same,⁷¹ and have a superintending control over all inferior courts of record in the counties within their respective territorial jurisdictions.⁷² The functions of the courts of appeals are mainly those of appellate tribunals,⁷³ and, except for the original jurisdiction granted in these classes of cases, they have no original jurisdiction;⁷⁴ even with respect to the issuance of these writs, it has been said that they should discourage the presentation to them of petitions therefor.⁷⁵ In a case in which it has no appellate jurisdiction, a court of appeals has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus,⁷⁶ certiorari,⁷⁷ or prohibition to the circuit court,⁷⁸ but the original jurisdiction vested in a court of appeals to hear and determine habeas corpus cases necessarily carries with it the authority to determine whatever questions may be involved in those cases.⁷⁹ A court of appeals has no jurisdiction of a suit to set aside an order of a circuit court granting an appeal to the supreme court.⁸⁰

§ 403. — Other Courts

The circuit courts have such appellate jurisdiction from inferior tribunals as is or may be provided by law, and they exercise a superintending control over criminal courts, probate courts, county courts, municipal corporation courts, justices of the peace, and all inferior tribunals, in each county in their respective circuits.

In accordance with Constitution, 1875, article VI § 22, the circuit courts have such appellate jurisdiction from inferior tribunals and justices of the peace, as is, or may be, provided by law.⁸¹ Constitution, 1875, article VI § 23 provides that the circuit court shall exercise a superintending control over criminal courts, probate courts, county courts, municipal corporation courts, justices of the peace and all inferior tribunals in each county in their respective circuits; and "superintending control" within the concept of this provision is the power to keep the inferior tribunals within the bounds of their jurisdiction by means of extraordinary common-law writs and other writs and process;⁸² when the power is resorted to for an authority over and above that comprehended by the ordinary common-law writs, it extends only to the matter of compelling the proper performance of purely ministerial duties and not to matters involving discretion or the exercise of a judicial power.⁸³ County courts have no superintending control over probate courts in their respective counties in the absence of a statute so providing.⁸⁴

Assumption of correct decision

Where circuit court had not had opportunity to determine whether first suit was pending at time second suit was brought, appellate court in refusing writ to prohibit second suit because defendants had a good defense thereto by answer assumed that circuit court would, if defense of former suit was properly brought to its attention, correctly decide issue.—State ex rel. § 404. — Cases Involving Constitutional Questions

The supreme court of Missouri has appellate jurisdiction of cases involving the construction of the constitution of the United States and of the state of Missouri. For jurisdiction to attach the constitutional question must be necessary to the decision and it must be properly before the court.

In accordance with the express provisions of the Constitution of Missouri, 1875, article VI § 12, as amended by Constitutional Amendment, 1884, article VI § 5, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in cases involving the construction of the constitution of the United States or of the state.⁸⁵ It is necessary that the constitutional question should be real and substantial, and not merely colorable,⁸⁶ and that a construction of the constitution should be essential to the determination of the case,⁸⁷ but it is not necessary that it should be apparent that the constitutional objections relied on are well taken.⁸⁸ In order to entitle a party to invoke the jurisdiction of the supreme court on the ground that a constitutional question is involved, the ruling of the trial court on such question must have been adverse to him,⁸⁹ and the violation of the constitution must operate to his detriment.⁹⁰ The court will determine whether such a question is involved before passing on the merits of the case.⁹¹

A court of appeals has no appellate jurisdiction to decide a constitutional question,⁹² or to decide a case in which a constitutional question is directly involved,⁹³ but the restriction applies only to cases

Construction of statute

(1) A case which involves merely the construction or interpretation of a state statute does not present a constitutional question within the jurisdiction of the supreme court.—Stock v. Schloman, 18 S.W.2d 428, 322 Mo. 1209, transferred, see 42 S.W.2d 61, 226 Mo.App. 334—*City of Kirkwood, to Use of Farmers' & Merchants' Trust Co., v. (2) So, too, the construction of a federal statute does not involve a constitutional question where its validity is not attacked.—Miller v. Connor, 157 S.W. 81, 250 Mo. 677—Lall v. Pacific Express Co., 81 Mo.App. 232.

Validity of statute of another state

(1) The supreme court may decide, in a case properly before it, the validity of an act of a sister state from the standpoint of its conformity to the United States constitution.—Kwiliekl v. Holman, 167 S.W. 989, 258 Mo. 624.

(2) However, there is nothing to prevent a court of appeals from passing on the validity of a statute of another state, under the constitution of that state.—Miller v. Kansas City Western R. Co., 168 S.W. 336, 180 Mo.App. 371.

Constitutional question apparently involved

Where a constitutional question is apparently involved and the supreme court assumes jurisdiction, the fact that it may finally dispose of the case on other grounds without an examination of the constitutional question does not affect its jurisdiction.—Milan v. Allen, Mo., 175 S.W. 933—Stanley v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 162 S.W. 210, 254 Mo. 237—Stinner v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., 162 S.W. 237, 254 Mo. 223—*State v. which reach the court by appeal or writ of error⁹⁴ unless superintending control over trial courts is involved,⁹⁵ and the original jurisdiction vested in a court of appeals to hear and determine habeas corpus cases carries with it the authority to determine constitutional questions involved therein.⁹⁶ If only the application of a constitutional provision and not its construction is involved, a court of appeals has jurisdiction.⁹⁷ It has jurisdiction of actions which merely involve the determination of whether a local or foreign law governs, or the construction of foreign law, as against the contention that the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution is involved in such cases;⁹⁸ but where the contention is that the matter has been adjudicated in another state, the full faith and credit clause is involved and the supreme court has jurisdiction.⁹⁹ To invest the supreme court with jurisdiction on the grounds that a statute is unconstitutional, the challenge must be that the statute is inherently and totally invalid and not merely that a certain interpretation of the statute renders it invalid.¹ A contention that the construction of a statute by the trial or circuit court,² or courts of appeals,³ or by a commission,⁴ is erroneous does not raise a constitutional question conferring jurisdic-

Construction in certain manner if accepted by court

That the construction of a statute or ordinance in a certain manner or as contended for by one party might, if accepted by the court, result in a rule which would violate some constitutional provision, if the statute had so provided, does not involve the construction of the constitution so as to give the supreme court jurisdiction.—Moyer v. Validity of statute determines jurisdiction

In determining whether the supreme court has jurisdiction on the ground that the constitutionality of a statute is involved, it is the validity, and not the construction of the statute which determines jurisdiction.—State v. Goad, 246 S.W. 917, 296 Mo. 452.

tion on the supreme court. Likewise, a constitutional question is not raised by the assertion that if plaintiff is allowed to recover defendant will be deprived of his property without due process of law.⁵

Previous decision on same question. Where a constitutional question has once been settled by the supreme court, an appeal cannot be taken to that court in a subsequent case on the ground that the same question is again involved,⁶ but where a constitutional question had not been decided at the time when an appeal was taken to the supreme court on the ground that such question was involved, that court will retain jurisdiction of the appeal, notwithstanding the fact that, since the appeal was taken, but before a decision thereon, the constitutional question had been decided in another case.⁷

Disposition of entire cause. Where a case is transferred from a court of appeals to the supreme court because a constitutional question is involved, the supreme court has jurisdiction to determine the whole case on its merits.⁸

Presentation and preservation of constitutional question. For jurisdiction of the supreme court to attach on this ground, the constitutional question must have been duly and properly⁹ raised and pre-

Judicial determination by commission

A contention that a commission in determining a question as authorized by statute has violated a provision of the constitution which vests judicial power in the courts does not confer jurisdiction on the supreme court where the statute itself is not attacked and only the construction of the statute to determine whether the commission exceeded its authority is involved.—*State ex rel. However, in some cases a previous decision on a constitutional question has been held not to preclude an appeal to the supreme court in a subsequent case where the same question is raised.—Curtice v. Schmidt, 101 S.W. 61, 202 Mo. 703, 10 Ann.Cas. 702—State v. Smith, 75 S.W. 625, 177 Mo. 69—15 C.J. p 1084 note 79.

Decision by United States supreme court

Appellant's contention that a federal statute is unconstitutional does not give the supreme court jurisdiction of the appeal, where the United States supreme court has decided against the contention.—Ham v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 235 S.W. 1046, transferred, see Hamm v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 245 S.W. 1109, 211 Mo.App. 460.

Question pending in United States supreme court

Where a case involving the constitutionality of a statute has been decided by the supreme court, but is pending in the United States supreme court on a writ of error, the constitutionality of the statute is still an open question, so that the supreme court will take jurisdiction of an appeal in a subsequent case in which the constitutionality of the same statute is questioned.—O'Donnell v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., 95 S.W. 196, 197 Mo. 110, 114 Am.S.R. 753, followed in Doyle v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., Mo., 95 S.W. 200.

Dictum in previous case as to the question of constitutionality does not prevent an appeal to the supreme court.—Cotton Lumber Co. v. La Crosse Lumber Co., 204 S.W. 957, 200 Mo. App. 7.

Question of unreasonable search and seizure

Supreme court, by previous ruling in similar case, could not put at rest constitutional question of unreasonable search and seizure, since whether a search is unreasonable depends on the facts in the particular case.—*State v. In court of appeals

(1) Constitutional question depriving court of appeals of jurisdiction may be raised in court of appeals if raised at the first opportunity.—State ex rel. Pickwick Stage Lines

v. Barton, 4 S.W.2d 852, 222 Mo.App. 1236.

(2) On appeal to court of appeals, constitutional question which would put jurisdiction in supreme court and deprive court of appeals of jurisdiction should not be postponed until after other questions have been raised, but should be urged at earliest possible moment, otherwise it will be regarded as waived.—Concrete Engineering Co. v. Grande Bldg. Co., 56 S.W.2d 595, 230 Mo. App. 443.

Motion for new trial

set forth,¹⁸ or, where the unconstitutionality of a statute is alleged, the place wherein the statute conflicts with the constitution must be pointed out.¹⁹

Where a constitutional question raised at the trial is withdrawn or the point conceded, and the case determined on other grounds,²⁰ or is not presented, briefed, or relied on on the appeal²¹ the supreme court is without jurisdiction.

§ 405. — Cases Involving Title to Real Estate

The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in cases where the title to real estate is actually and directly involved.

Under the express provisions of Missouri Constitution, 1875, article VI § 12, as amended by Constitutional Amendment, 1884, article VI § 5, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in cases where the title to real estate is involved.²² In order for the court to take jurisdiction on this ground, the title to such real estate must be actually and directly involved,²³ by which it is meant that the judgment rendered on the entire case as made by

Determination of ownership

The constitutional limitation on courts of appeal as to passing on title to real estate is such that courts have full power to pass on such issue so long as the decision of such courts does not determine who is and who is not the owner of the real estate in issue as an end of adjudicating title.—Gibbany v. Effect of decision refusing jurisdiction

A decision of the supreme court that it was without appellate jurisdiction of ordinary ejectment action would not jeopardize titles to realty which were founded on court's prior judgments in ejectment.—Gibbany v. Walker, 113 S.W.2d 792, 342 Mo. 156, transferred, see App., 121 S.W.2d 317.

Priority between liens

(1) That priority of liens on land as between judgment and claims is at issue does not give supreme court appellate jurisdiction, where it would have none if only establishment of one lien was sought.—King v. Hayes, 4 S.W.2d 1062, 319 Mo. 569.

§ 407. — Character of Parties

The supreme court of Missouri has appellate jurisdiction in cases where a county or other political subdivision of the state or any state officer is a party of record.

In accordance with the express provisions of Missouri Constitution, 1875, article VI § 12, as amended by Constitutional Amendment, 1884, article VI § 5, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in cases where a county⁶⁰ or other political subdivision of the state,⁶¹ or any state officer,⁶² is a party; but only when a party of record.⁶³ The term "political subdivision of the state" does not include a school district,⁶⁴ drainage district,⁶⁵ road district,⁶⁶ sewer district,⁶⁷ or a state hospital.⁶⁸ It includes an organized township in a county under township organization.⁶⁹ A city or town within a county is not included within the term,⁷⁰ but the city of St. Louis which is not within a county is a political subdivision,⁷¹ although the supreme

Finance commissioner liquidating delinquent bank

(1) The state commissioner of finance in liquidating a delinquent bank is not a "state officer," so as to give the supreme court jurisdiction, for his duties in so doing are in a representative capacity only and in such capacity he does not exercise statewide functions coextensive with state boundaries.—In re Wellston Trust Co., Mo., 131 S.W.2d 720—State v. sation commission,⁹² but the commission for the blind has been held not a legal entity separate from its members and the supreme court has jurisdiction.⁹³ Where it is doubtful whether a certain officer is a state officer, the proper procedure is for the court of appeals to transfer the case to the supreme court for its judgment and determination.⁹⁴

§ 408. — Title to Office

The supreme court of Missouri has appellate jurisdiction of cases involving the title to any office under the state.

Under the express provisions of Missouri Constitution 1875, article VI § 12, as amended, Amendment, 1884, article VI § 5, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction of cases involving the title to any office under the state.⁹⁵ That a person holding an office under the state is involved in litigation does not give the supreme court jurisdiction if title to the office is not involved.⁹⁶ The term "office under this state" includes the office of school director,⁹⁷ road commissioner,⁹⁸ clerk of the circuit court,⁹⁹ county collector of revenue,¹ township officers,² policeman,³ and constable.⁴ The term does not include the office of village trustee,⁵ executor of an estate,⁶ or offices created and governed by municipal charter or ordinances such as the office of mayor of a third class city,⁷ city attorney,⁸ or city collector.⁹

§ 409. — Amount in Controversy

The supreme court of Missouri has appellate jurisdiction of cases where the amount in controversy is in excess of the sum designated by statute as provided for by the constitution. The amount must be actually in dispute and it must be affirmatively disclosed by the record.

The Constitutional Amendment of 1884 § 3, gives to the legislature power to increase or diminish the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the courts of appeal, and under this power the limits have been successively increased from the original amount of twenty-five hundred dollars fixed by Constitution, 1875, article VI § 12, to forty-five hundred dollars by Laws, 1901, p 107, and to seventy-five hundred dollars by Laws, 1909, p 397. The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction of cases where the amount in dispute is in excess of the designated sum,¹⁰ but where no other special grounds for its

(2) Value of estate fixes jurisdiction on appeal from judgment for will contestants.—Fowler v. Fowler, 2 S.W.2d 707, 318 Mo. 1078.

Proceeding to remove executor or administrator

(1) In a proceeding to remove an executor or administrator, the pecuniary value of the right to administer the estate and not the value of the property to be administered, fixes the appellate jurisdiction.—Fields v. Luck, 34 S.W.2d 710, 327 Mo. 113, transferred, see In re Roff's Estate, 50 S.W.2d 156, 226 Mo. dispute, as determinative of jurisdiction, may be the amount claimed in good faith in the petition,²⁰ the amount of the judgment or verdict rendered in the trial court,²¹ or the difference between the amount of the petition and the amount of the judgment or verdict,²² dependent on the precise amount which actually remains in dispute between the parties on appeal.²³

The constitutional provision giving the legislature power to increase or to diminish the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the courts of appeals did not authorize the legislature to amend a statute fixing such limits by adding a proviso that the supreme court should retain jurisdiction in any pending case in which it had made any decision or ruling.²⁴

Where the special grounds of jurisdiction exist, the amount in controversy is immaterial.²⁵

Amendment and remittitur. After a judgment or determination against plaintiff, an amendment of the pleadings to reduce the amount claimed to less than seventy-five hundred dollars so as to confer jurisdiction on the court of appeals is ineffectual for this purpose,²⁶ and a remittitur by plaintiff after judgment for him is likewise ineffectual if no new judgment is rendered,²⁷ but a remittitur after a verdict but before judgment may fix appellate jurisdiction in the court of appeals.²⁸

§ 410. — Transfer of Cases to Court in Banc

When the judges of a division of the supreme court are equally divided or when a judge of a division dissents from an opinion or when a federal question is involved, the cause, on the application of the losing party or when a division in which the case is pending shall so order, must be transferred to the court in banc for its decision.

Causes are transferable to the supreme court in banc,²⁹ in accordance with the constitution of Missouri, Constitution Amendment, 1890, article VI §

Consolidated cases

Jurisdiction of court, on appeal from judgment rendered after consolidation of cases, is determined by aggregate sum of the consolidated actions, and so in a suit on behalf of numerous property owners for injunction, value of total relief granted to all plaintiffs was considered in determining appellate jurisdiction of supreme court—Aufferheide v. Polar Wave Ice & Fuel Co., 4 S.W.2d 776, 319 Mo. 337.

Appeal by defendant from judgment

Where an appeal is by defendant from a judgment against him, the amount of the judgment is the standard to be used in determining the amount in dispute for purposes of appellate jurisdiction.—Reynolds v. Grain Belt Mills Co., 69 S.W.2d 947, 334 Mo. 712, transferred, see Reynolds v. Appeal from order setting aside verdict

Where plaintiff appeals from an order setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial, the amount of the verdict fixes appellate jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Long v. Ellison, 199 S.W. 984, 272 Mo. 571, quashing record Clark v. Long, App., 196 S.W. 409.

22. Mo.—Sofian v. Douglas, 23 S.W.2d 126, 324 Mo. 258.

Inadequate recovery

(1) Where plaintiff appeals from an order denying a new trial after a verdict for less than the amount sued for, the difference between plaintiff's claim and the actual recovery is the amount in dispute.—Craton v. Huntzinger, Mo.App., 177 S.W. 816.

(2) Where defendant appeals from an order granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict is inadequate, the amount in dispute is the difference between the sum sued for and the amount of the verdict.—Sofian v. Douglas, 23 S.W.2d 126, 324 Mo. 258—Ford v. K. Jones Motor Co., Mo.App., 115 S.W.2d 3.

However, if the cause is transferred to the court of appeals after the amendment and plaintiff acquiesces in the jurisdiction until verdict is rendered, he cannot, by motion to transfer the cause to the supreme court, deny the jurisdiction of the court of appeals.—Minter v. Tootle-Campbell Dry Goods Co., Mo., 204 S.W. 725.

4, which provides that when the judges of a division of the supreme court are equally divided in opinion in a cause, or when a judge of a division dissents from the opinion therein, or when a federal question is involved, the cause must, on the application of the losing party, be transferred to the court in banc for its decision; or when a division in which a cause is pending shall so order, the cause must be transferred to the court in banc for its decision. As used herein, the words "federal question" should be interpreted as involving construction of the federal constitution or the validity of a treaty or a statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States, as defined in Constitution Article VI § 12.³⁰ The federal question must be substantial,³¹ and it cannot be raised for the first time on the motion to transfer.³² The decision of a division that no federal question is involved and its consequent refusal to transfer the case to the court in banc cannot be reviewed by the court in banc.³³ The supreme court in banc cannot entertain a motion to order the transfer of a case decided by one of the divisions to it for review, where none of the grounds for the transfer specified in the constitution appear.³⁴

§ 411. — Appeals from Court of Appeals to Supreme Court

In cases wherein the supreme court in Missouri has appellate jurisdiction, appeals do not lie first to the court of appeals but lie directly from the trial court to the supreme court.

The Missouri Constitution, 1875, article VI § 12, formerly gave to the supreme court jurisdiction of appeals from the court of appeals in certain cases, but this appellate jurisdiction has been abolished by Constitution Amendment, 1884, article VI § 5, and under this amendment, in the classes of cases specified in the constitution as within the supreme court's appellate jurisdiction, direct appeals lie to the supreme court from circuit courts and courts having jurisdiction pertaining to circuit courts, and writs of error may be issued by the supreme court to such courts.³⁵ As stated in § 402 supra, the courts of appeal, when acting within their jurisdictional limits, as long as they promulgate no rule of law conflicting with former controlling decisions of the supreme court, are courts of last resort.

§ 412. — Certification of Cases to Supreme Court

When a court of appeals in Missouri renders a decision which any of the judges sitting therein deems contrary to any previous decision of any one of the courts of appeal or of the supreme court, such court of appeals must of its own motion certify and transfer such cause or proceeding to the supreme court, and thereupon the supreme court must rehear and determine the cause or proceeding, as in the case of jurisdiction obtained by ordinary appellate process.

In accordance with the express provisions of Constitutional Amendment, 1884, Article VI § 6, when a court of appeals renders a decision which any of the judges sitting therein deems contrary to any previous decision of any one of the courts of appeal or of the supreme court, such court of appeal must of its own motion, pending the same term, and not afterward, certify and transfer such cause or proceeding and the original transcript therein to the supreme court,³⁶ and thereupon the

Unanimity as to conflict

(1) A cause may properly be certified when all the judges of the court of appeals regard the decision as contrary to a previous decision of the other court of appeals.—Rodgers v. Western Home Town Mut. F. Ins. Co., 85 S.W. 369, 186 Mo. 248.

(2) If court of appeals as a whole agree that their opinion is in conflict with an opinion of the supreme court, it is their duty to make their opinion conform to the opinion of the supreme court, and such court as a whole cannot certify the case to supreme court.—Woodson v. Leo-Greenwald Vinegar Co., Mo., 264 S.W. 674.

15 C.J. p 1092 note 63 [g] (8).

Order of certification

An order of certification, reciting that a judge of the court of appeals deems decision of majority in conflict with certain designated opinions of supreme court, is in substantial compliance with constitution, although its exact language is not used.—Schmohl v. Travelers' Ins. Co., Mo., 197 S.W. 60, answering certified questions, App., 189 S.W. 597.

Origin of cases

The constitutional amendment includes all cases whether originating in the court of appeals or not.—Child Sav. Institute v. Knobel, 37 S.W.2d 920, 327 Mo. 609, 76 A.L.R. 1068, transferred, see, App., 29 S.W.2d 725—15 C.J. p 1093 note 66 [f].

Statute not considered in previous case

Where decision rendered is necessitated by statute which apparently was not considered by another court of appeals in previous case, there is no such conflict between decisions of the two courts as requires transferring cause to supreme court.—Massey-Harris Harvester Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, 48 S.W.2d 158, 226 Mo.App. 916.

Citation of previous decisions by dissenting judge

The amendment does not apply to a decision in which one of the judges dissents, citing previous supreme court decisions in support of his dissenting opinion, where he certifies that he does not deem the decision of the court contrary to any previous decision.—State v. Smith, 16 S.W. 401, 17 S.W. 901, 107 Mo. 527.

Determination by dissenting judge

(1) Dissenting judge of court of appeals has right to determine which is last decision on given state of facts, and his determination that opinion of court of appeals conflicts with it is sole criterion of alleged conflict so far as conferring jurisdiction on supreme court is concerned.—Schmohl v. Travelers' Ins. Co., Mo., 197 S.W. 60, answering certified questions, App., 189 S.W. 597.

(2) Where supreme court on certiorari quashes record of court of appeals, fact that opinion in that case is followed by court of appeals on further hearing of case does not preclude dissenting judge of that court from believing that second opinion is contrary to last decision of supreme court on facts of that case.—Schmohl v. Travelers' Ins. Co., supra.

the supreme court.³⁹ Even though the court of appeals is in error in deeming its decision in conflict with a previous decision, the supreme court has jurisdiction.⁴⁰ The case must be actually decided by the court of appeals before the supreme court has jurisdiction.⁴¹

§ 413. — Transfer of Appeals

Where the supreme court or a court of appeals finds that a case brought before it on appeal or writ of error from a lower court is not within its jurisdiction, the case must be transferred to the court which has appellate jurisdiction therein.

Under a statute so providing, where the supreme court, or a court of appeals, finds that a case brought before it is not within its jurisdiction, the case must be transferred to the court which has appellate jurisdiction therein,⁴² and where a case is brought into the wrong court of appeals, it must be transferred to the proper court.⁴³ The statute is limited to cases sent from a lower court on appeal or writ of error and so the case cannot be transferred under the statute where it is before the court by special appeal granted by appellate judges,⁴⁴ or where the proceedings have originated in the appellate court.⁴⁵ Where a case taken to the supreme court on the ground that a constitutional question is involved is by such court transferred to a court of appeals, this amounts to a determination that

The jurisdiction of the supreme court is treated in § 415 infra; that of the district court in § 416 infra.

§ 415. — Supreme Court

The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction, supervisory control over inferior courts, and power to issue original and remedial writs.

Under the constitution, except as otherwise provided therein, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only.⁴⁹ The appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court extends to all cases at law and in equity, subject to such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law.⁵⁰ The court has original jurisdiction,⁵¹ in its discretion,⁵² to issue, hear, and determine writs of habeas corpus,⁵³ mandamus,⁵⁴ quo warranto,⁵⁵ certiorari,⁵⁶ prohibition,⁵⁷ injunction,⁵⁸ and such other original and

Appeals taken to different courts

Where cross appeals are taken, one to the supreme court and the other to a court of appeals, the latter court should transfer the case to the supreme court.—Walsh v. Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., 52 S.W.2d 839, 331 Mo. 118—15 C.J. p 1147 note 81.

Substitution of judges

A statute providing that the supreme court shall order the substitution of one district judge for another on a petition signed by the district judge properly presiding, and stating that petitioner cannot obtain an impartial trial without such substitution, is invalid as an attempt to extend the jurisdiction of the supreme court beyond the limits fixed by the constitution.—In re Weston, 72 P. 512, 28 Mont. 207.

District Court of Fourth Judicial Dist., Ravalli County, 241 P. 240, 74 Mont. 488.

52. Time to object to exercise of discretion

Contention that supreme court could not assume original jurisdiction on ground that there was sufficient time for hearing and decision in district court and review, if desired, came too late after supreme court had issued order to show cause, since supreme court thereby exercised discretion given by constitution in favor of jurisdiction.—Ford v. Mitchell, 61 P.2d 815, 103 Mont. 99.

Question of public law

Where in a prior appeal the land classification act was held unconstitutional since which a remedial statute had been enacted and its effect upon the prior judgment was raised in a petition for mandamus to county officials to secure payment for work done under the land classification act, a question of public law was involved of which the supreme court has original jurisdiction.—State v. Tyler, 208 P. 1081, 64 Mont. 124.

Public rights

(1) Under a statute so providing, the court has original jurisdiction of injunction proceedings only where the state is a party, or the public is interested, or the rights of the public are involved.—Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, 62 P.2d 342, 103 Mont. 148—Guillot v. State Highway Commission of Montana, 56 P.2d 1072, 102 Mont. 149—State ex rel. Fisher v. School Dist. No. 1 of Silver Bow County, 34 P.2d 522, 97 Mont. 358.

(2) Public and private rights may be involved in same case, and in protecting public rights private remedial writs as may be necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. On an application for an extraordinary remedy, the court will grant appropriate relief regardless of what writ is requested.⁵⁹

Supervisory jurisdiction. The court is given a general supervisory control over all inferior courts,⁶⁰ under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law.⁶¹ In the exercise of its supervisory power it may issue a supervisory writ.⁶² Its supervisory jurisdiction, when exercised, is in the nature of a summary appeal and is confined to exigencies arising during the progress of litigation in inferior courts to remedy manifest wrongs or tyrannical or arbitrary acts which cannot otherwise be righted and which will re-rights may be incidentally protected and enforced, but public rights must be paramount and moving consideration in determining whether supreme court has original jurisdiction to issue writ of injunction.—Sawyer Stores v. Mitchell, supra.

Actual malice on part of court need not be shown to establish order made as tyrannical; that conclusion follows if the order or judgment is not warranted by any substantial evidence in the record.—State v. District Court of Third Judicial Dist. in and for Powell County, 278 P. 132, 85 Mont. 215.

Inadvertence or fraud

(1) If order on settlement of accounts in probate proceeding is made by inadvertence or fraud, it may be reached in the exercise of supervisory jurisdiction, even though an appeal might lie.—State ex rel. Clark v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Silver Bow County, 57 P.2d 809, 102 Mont. 227—State ex rel. Regis v. District Court, Second Judicial Dist., in and for Silver Bow County, 33 P.2d 266, 97 Mont. 83.

(2) In proceedings for writ of supervisory control based on alleged inadvertence of trial court in entering decree, finding of trial court that there was no inadvertence will not be disturbed where supported by some evidence, though there was evidence which would have sustained holding to the contrary.—State ex rel. Brophy v. District Court, Second Judicial Dist., in and for Silver Bow County, supra.

Record not containing testimony

Motion to quash proceeding for writ of supervisory control would not be sustained on ground that all of testimony was not before reviewing court, since court was not reviewing correctness of ruling of judge on testimony before him.—State ex rel. ercise of discretion lodged in the inferior court.⁷¹ This jurisdiction is for the control of inferior courts, not the control of litigants or private individuals.⁷² Where the facts before the court are sufficient to warrant relief, the proper relief will be granted where the application is for a writ of supervisory control or other appropriate relief.⁷³

§ 416. — District Courts

District courts have such appellate jurisdiction as is conferred upon them by law.

The constitution gives to the district courts appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in justices' and other inferior courts in their respective districts as may be prescribed by law and consistent with the constitution.⁷⁴

§ 417. Nebraska

Decisions relating to the supreme and district courts of Nebraska will be discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 418. — Supreme Court

The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction with respect to judgments and decrees of the district court. It may issue writs of mandamus, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, and it has original jurisdiction of civil cases to which the state is a party and of actions relating to the state revenue.

The constitution gives to the supreme court original jurisdiction⁷⁵ in all cases relating to the revenue,⁷⁶ civil cases in which the state is a party,⁷⁷ mandamus,⁷⁸ quo warranto,⁷⁹ and habeas corpus, and such appellate jurisdiction as may be provided by law. Under the governing statutes, the supreme court has appellate and final jurisdiction of all matters of appeal and proceedings in error which may be taken from the judgments or decrees of the district courts in all matters of law, fact, or equity, where the rules of law or the principles of equity appear from the files, exhibits, or records of such court, to have been erroneously determined.⁸⁰ The specification in the constitution of cases in which the supreme court may exercise original jurisdiction excludes all others;⁸¹ but where jurisdiction is in direct terms conferred upon the supreme court, it will be exercised in such manner as constitutionally it may be exercised, even though no rules of procedure applicable to such a case have been provided by the legislature.⁸² The supreme court has rendered advisory opinions without express constitutional or statutory authority.⁸³

§ 419. — District Courts

The district courts have such appellate jurisdiction as the legislature may provide. Review of proceedings of inferior courts see supra § 274.

§ 420. Nevada

The jurisdiction of the supreme court is treated in § 421 infra; that of the district courts in § 422 infra.

74. The legislature may provide for appeals from the state board of medical examiners, for the constitution does not limit appellate jurisdiction to appeals from justices' and inferior courts so as to exclude legislative power in this respect.—State v. First Judicial Dist. Ct., 34 P. 298, 13 Mont. 370.

75. Original jurisdiction, when not expressly restricted, is concurrent with that of the district courts of the proper counties and will be entertained in accordance with the terms, orders, and rules prescribed.—In re Petition of Atty.-Gen., 58 N. W. 945, 40 Neb. 402.

Appeal from denial of writ

Where an appeal from a denial of a writ of mandamus by the district court had not been taken within the time provided by law, the appeal could not be treated as an original application for mandamus so as to bring it within the supreme court's jurisdiction.—State v. Amsberry, 178 N.W. 822, 104 Neb. 273, vacating 177 N.W. 179, 104 Neb. 273.

§ 421. — Supreme Court

The supreme court is a court of appellate jurisdiction possessing power to issue various writs.

The appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court of Nevada is prescribed by the constitution of that state,⁸⁴ and the court is given appellate jurisdiction in all cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy exceeds three hundred dollars.⁸⁵ The court is also given power to issue various writs,⁸⁶ including writs of mandamus,⁸⁷ certiorari,⁸⁸ prohibition,⁸⁹ and quo warranto.⁹⁰

§ 422. — District Courts

District courts have appellate jurisdiction with respect to inferior courts.

District courts have appellate jurisdiction over cases arising in inferior tribunals.⁹¹

§ 423. New Hampshire

The supreme court of New Hampshire has appellate jurisdiction and supervisory power over inferior courts.

The justices of the supreme court are required to give advisory opinions.

The constitution gives to the general court (the legislature) the authority to erect and constitute judicatories and courts of record. By the statute of 1901, two courts were established instead of the court then existing, to be known as the supreme court and the superior court. The supreme court has general superintendence of all courts of inferior jurisdiction, and is required to do and perform all the duties reasonably requisite and necessary to be done by a court of final jurisdiction of questions of law and general superintendence of inferior courts.⁹²

Advisory opinions. Under the constitution each branch of the legislature as well as the governor and council has authority to require the opinions of the justices of the supreme court upon important questions of law and upon solemn occasions.⁹³ This advisory power is limited to the expression of opinion on important questions of law⁹⁴ necessary to be determined by the body requesting advice,⁹⁵ and the court will not give opinions on mere

84. Jurisdiction limited to questions of law

Nev.—State v. Mills, 12 Nev. 403.

The appellate jurisdiction is limited to court proceedings, and hence no appeal lies to the supreme court from an order of the district judge requiring a county assessor to file in the county court a statement of taxes.—Lyon County v. Esmeralda County, 1 P. 339, 18 Nev. 166.

Court may allow counsel fee on appeal in divorce case

Nev.—Lake v. Lake, 30 P. 878, 17 Nev. 230.

Judgment of district court on appeal

Where a suit to foreclose a lien is brought in a justice's court and appealed to the district court, an appeal lies to the supreme court from the judgment of the district court.—Dickson v. Corbett, 10 Nev. 439.

Tax, impost, assessment, or municipal fine

An order of a justice's court imposing costs against a garnishee who refused to make a statement is not a tax, impost, assessment, or municipal fine within the meaning of the constitutional grant of jurisdiction provision.—Wearne v. Haynes, 13 Nev. 103.

85. By demand in controversy is meant the sum sought to be recovered by plaintiff, and not that for which he actually receives judgment.—Klein v. Allenbach, 6 Nev. 159.

86. The power to issue writs is an original jurisdiction and not merely auxiliary to appellate jurisdiction.—State v. McCullough, 3 Nev. 202.

87. Nev.—State v. Lamb, 138 P. 907, 37 Nev. 19.

15 C.J. p 1097 note 39.

Power same as at common law

Intention of framers of constitution in conferring jurisdiction upon supreme court to issue writs of prohibition was to confer right to issue writ as it had been recognized at common law.—O'Brien v. Trousdale, supra.

Administrative action

Justices will refuse opinion on question on which an administrative hearing and finding is necessary.—In re Opinion of the Justices, 190 A. 425, 88 N.H. 434.

Scope of review

In giving advisory opinion, it is not province of justices to review bills to which questions relate in detail to determine whether they are objectionable in minor respect.—In re Opinion of the Justices, 149 A. 321, 84 N.H. 557, 559.

Validity of state contracts is question of law, as to which legislature is entitled to advice.—In re Opinion of the Justices, 128 A. 812, 81 N.H. 573.

Assistance in performance of duties

Opinion of justices in answer to questions of governor and council should not go beyond assistance to them in performance of their executive duties.—In re Opinion of the Justices, 190 A. 425, 88 N.H. 434.

Questions to be decided by bodies other than state courts

(1) The court's duty to advise is not limited to questions which may questions of expediency,⁹⁶ or on questions involving private vested rights which are protected by the constitution.⁹⁷ The justices will decline to answer questions which are not pending and awaiting action in the body propounding the inquiry,⁹⁸ or where no answer can be returned in time to be of aid to the body requesting advice.⁹⁹ The justices may also ask to be excused from answering where they are divided in opinion on the questions asked.¹ The court's opinions are merely advisory and are not adjudications.²

Under the constitution, the court of errors and appeals is one of last resort in all cases, and its jurisdiction is purely appellate.³ Writs and processes may issue out of the court of errors and appeals,⁴ and writs of error lie to remove final judgments in any circuit court directly into such court and may be brought in the same manner and subject to the same rules as exist in case of a writ of error to the supreme court.⁵ On the law side, the court is under the constitution confined to the review of judicial errors committed in the supreme and circuit courts and cannot review the judgments of courts inferior to them.⁶

§ 426. — Other Courts

There have been decisions relating to the appellate jurisdiction of various New Jersey courts.

Review of ordinary's findings

Ordinary is only statutory agent to hear and determine inheritance tax questions, and his findings cannot be reviewed by court of errors and appeals on appeal, but only by supreme court on certiorari, but, where respondent does not object, the court, in order to avoid unnecessary litigation, will review an intermediate order on the merits.—Miller v. § 427. New Mexico

The supreme court and the district courts have such appellate jurisdiction and such power to issue writs as is conferred upon them by law.

The supreme court of New Mexico is a court of review.¹⁸ Although the constitution prescribes the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court, it does not give to litigants the right to invoke such jurisdiction by appeal; that right is granted by the legislature.¹⁹ The supreme court has original jurisdiction in quo warranto and mandamus against all state officers, boards, and commissions,²⁰ and a superintending control over all inferior courts.²¹ The supreme court also has power to issue various writs, including writs of mandamus²² and pro-

22. Ministerial duties

The supreme court is without jurisdiction to mandamus a district judge to certify that a recount of ballots was made in his presence, since his status in the performance

hibition.²³ The original jurisdiction granted to the supreme court by the constitution is by implication a denial of any other original jurisdiction.²⁴

The district courts, under the constitution, have appellate jurisdiction of all cases originating in inferior courts in their districts, and supervisory control over the same.²⁵ They have power to issue habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, prohibition, and all other writs, remedial or otherwise, in the exercise of their jurisdiction.²⁶

§ 428. New York

The county courts have such appellate jurisdiction as may be conferred upon them by law.

The county courts have such appellate jurisdiction, and such appellate jurisdiction only, as is conferred on them by law.²⁷ Where a statute so provides, the only mode by which the county court may review a judgment is by an appeal.²⁸ The county court should give the judgment which should have been given below;²⁹ and in the exercise of its power to modify the judgment of the lower court it may render an entirely different judgment.³⁰ The county court, on appeal, may allow an amendment of the answer.³¹

§ 429. — Court of Appeals

The jurisdiction of the court of appeals is prescribed by the constitution and by statutes enacted under the legislative power to restrict such jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the court of appeals is prescribed by the state constitution.³² The legislature may, however, restrict its jurisdiction and the right to appeal to it³³ save that the right of appeal cannot be made to depend upon the amount involved;³⁴ the legislature may not enlarge the right of appeal.³⁵

Under the governing constitutional and statutory provisions appeals may be taken to the court of appeals in civil cases.³⁶ (1) As of right from a judgment or order entered upon the decision of an appellate division of the supreme court which final-of such duty is not that of a state officer, board, or commission, or of an inferior court, to whom the court's writ of mandamus may run.—State v. Helmick, 294 P. 316, 35 N.M. 219.

23. Question not passed on by lower court

The supreme court will not determine that the court has not acquired personal jurisdiction, in absence of a ruling thereon by the lower court, but will require that the question be submitted to that court; the supreme court assumes that a question pending before an inferior court will be correctly decided.—State ex rel. Stanley v. Lujan, 77 P.2d 178, 42 N.M. 291.

24. N.M.—Thurman v. Grimes, 1 P. 2d 972, 35 N.M. 498.

25. District court sitting as inferior court

The constitutional provision that the district court shall have appellate jurisdiction of all cases originating in inferior courts and tribunals in their respective districts does not provide for an appeal from district court sitting as an inferior tribunal to the district court sitting as such.—State ex rel. Weltmer v. Taylor, 79 P.2d 937, 42 N.M. 405.

Judgment entered after reversal of order vacating inquest

Judgment on trial or inquest, entered after appellate division reversed order vacating inquest, was not a judgment entered upon the decision of the appellate division. A judgment entered upon the decision of the appellate division is a judgment entered by the clerk to whom the order of the appellate division and the case and papers upon which the appeal was heard are transmitted, pursuant to such order.—Jensen v. Union Ry. Co. of New York City, supra.

Order directing payment of rent to receiver, appointed in foreclosure suit to which tenant was party, was an intermediate one, and hence not reviewable without allowance of appeal or certification of question, although a justice of the appellate division dissented from the affirmance of the order.—Klasko Finance Corporation v. Surrogate's decree

A stipulation for judgment absolute would be inappropriate in case of an order which reversed a surrogate's decree in a special proceeding and directed a new hearing. Consequently, an appeal by leave of

Right to terminate attorney-client contract

The question whether a client can arbitrarily terminate contract of employment of an attorney for a fixed period, not with reference to any particular litigation, is of such general interest that plaintiff attorney, demurrer to whose complaint setting up such question has been sustained, will be permitted on motion to appeal to the court of appeals, the question being certified.—Greenberg v. Jerome H. Remick & Co., 182 N.Y.S. 229, 192 App.Div. 966.

Appeal dismissed

Where grounds for appeal as of right did not exist, and no permission had been granted to appeal from unanimous affirmance to court of appeal, appeal may be dismissed.—Squier v. Houghton, 193 N.E. 390, 265 N.Y. 501, dismissing appeal 271 N.Y.S. 951, 241 App.Div. 809, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 506, 294 U.S. 711, 79 L.Ed. 1245.

Time for making application to appellate division for leave to appeal on certified questions runs from date of service on opposite party of appellate division order with notice of entry thereof.—Kessler v. Fligel, 192 N.E. 415, 265 N.Y. 239, reversing 191 N.E. 624, 264 N.Y. 689, granting motion 269 N.Y.S. 664, 240 App.Div. 232. Affirmed 195 N.E. 176, 266 N.Y. 508.

Permission will be refused

(1) Where appeal is sought on a question not presented to the appellate division, as it is for the court of appeals to determine whether it should consider such a question.—Groonstad v. Robbins Dry Dock & Repair Co., 196 N.Y.S. 412, 203 App.Div. 33, denying reargument Groonstad v. Robbins Dry Dock & Repair Co., 194 N.Y.S. 475, 201 App.Div. 581, and reversed on other grounds 139 N.E. 777, 236 N.Y. 52.

(2) Where appellate division, on unanimously affirming judgment of the supreme court on verdict of jury, considers evidence amply sufficient to sustain verdict.—Luckhardt v. City of New York, 185 N.Y.S. 95, 194 App.Div. 953.

Choice of remedies

The aggrieved party has a choice of remedies. "He might appeal directly to this court in which event the only subject of review would be the interlocutory order. . . . He might appeal again to the appellate division, in which event the only subject of review would be the proceedings subsequent to the interlocutory order. . . . If those proceedings were confirmed, an appeal to this court with notice of intention to review the earlier proceedings would bring the entire record here."—Redman v. Verplex Art Co., 143 N.E. 650, 237 N.Y. 475, reversing 199 N.Y.S. 945, 206 App.Div. 703.

Leave must be obtained, from the appellate division or the court of appeals if the affirmance was unanimous.—Sultzbach v. Sultzbach, 144 N.E. 638, 238 N.Y. 353.

When a final judgment is entered by the appellate division on an appeal from an interlocutory order, the sole remedy is by appeal to the court of appeals.—Redman v. Verplex Art Co., 143 N.E. 650, 237 N.Y. 475, reversing 199 N.Y.S. 945, 206 App.Div. 703.

Prior to the amendment of the statute, this procedure was available only if the appellate division affirmed. In other cases it was necessary for appellant to appeal first to the appellate division, and from its judgment to the court of appeals.—*Bowne v. Trial of fact issue

Appeal cannot be taken directly to court of appeals from supreme court judgment, rendered after trial of fact issue, unless appellate division refuses new trial.—Jensen v. Union Ry. Co. of New York City, supra.

Reversal of order granting new trial

An appeal lies directly to the court of appeals from a judgment entered upon a verdict after the appellate division reverses an order granting a new trial and reinstates the verdict.—*Logan v. The jurisdiction of the court of appeals is subject to the limitations that: (1) No appeal shall be taken to such court from a final judgment or order of the appellate division in any civil case or proceeding originally commenced in any court other than the supreme court, a county court, a surrogate's court, or a court of claims unless the appellate division allows the appeal and certifies that in its opinion a question of law is involved which ought to be reviewed by the court of appeals.⁴⁹ (2) The jurisdiction of the court is limited to the review of questions of law,⁵⁰ except that the court may review facts found by the appellate division, where the appellate division, on reversing or modifying a final judgment in an action or a final order in a special proceeding, makes new findings of fact and renders final judgment or a final order thereon.⁵¹

§ 430. — Supreme Court and Appellate Division Thereof

The appellate division, appellate term, and special term of the supreme court have such jurisdiction as is vested in them by the constitutional and statutory provisions of the state.

Under Const. Art VI § 2 the several appellate divisions of the supreme court are vested with the jurisdiction resting in certain courts from and after the last day of December, 1895, and with such additional jurisdiction as may be conferred by the legislature.⁵² The appellate division is not a separate court, but a branch of the supreme court; in effect it is the supreme court sitting in banc.⁵³

Ground for entry of judgment

Where the appellate division reversed an interlocutory judgment, and directed that an additional party be joined and a new trial had; and judgment was entered against plaintiff on his failure to join the additional party, plaintiff could appeal directly to the court of appeals, but such review would be limited to the question of joining an additional party.—Kade v. Sanitary Fireproofing & Contracting Co., 176 N.E. 428, 256 N.Y. 371, denying dismissal of appeal 236 N.Y.S. 78, 227 App.Div. 622, adhered to 238 N.Y.S. 858, 228 App.Div. 646, appeal dismissed 177 N.E. 421, 257 N.Y. 203.

Reinstating trial court's judgment

Where the appellate division reverses the trial court on both the law and the facts, the court of appeals, in reversing the appellate division on the law, cannot reinstate the trial court's judgment, but a new trial must be directed on the facts.—Marks v. Cowdin, 123 N.E. 139, 226 N.Y. 138, reversing 162 N.Y.S. 567, 175 App.Div. 700.—Queeney v. Willi, 122 N.E. 198, 225 N.Y. 374, reversing 157 N.Y.S. 642, 171 App.Div. 588.—*Maguire v. Verdict supported by evidence

Under the former constitutional provision, the court of appeals could not review a unanimous decision of the appellate division that there was evidence supporting or tending to sustain a finding of fact or a verdict not directed by the court.—Fox v. Proctor, 112 N.E. 470, 217 N.Y. 711, affirming 145 N.Y.S. 709, 160 App.Div. 712—15 C.J. p 1099 note 90.

Certiorari

Under the former statute the appellate division could issue writs of certiorari and hear and determine the same.—People v. Lazansky, 102 N.E. 556, 208 N.Y. 435—15 C.J. p 1104 note 67.

Prohibition against proceeding in adjoining judicial department may issue only if the appellate division of that department is not in session.—People ex rel. Whitman v. Woodward, 134 N.Y.S. 910, 150 App.Div. 180, 3 N.Y.Civ.Proc.N.S., 301.

Review of determination of public officer or board

(1) Where review of determination of public officer or board is sought in pursuance of Civ.Pract.Act § 1283 et seq, partially upon the sufficiency of the evidence taken to sustain the determination, and partially upon questions of law arising independently of the sufficiency of the evidence, the entire proceeding to review should be transferred to the appellate division thus at one time all of the questions raised may be determined.—Galusha v. Picard, 1 N.Y.S.2d 222, 165 Misc. 539.

(2) Under the former provision of the statute, Civ.Pract.Act § 1318, it was held that the appellate division was without authority to grant original mandamus order directed to state board of parole.—Carey v. Moore, 279 N.Y.S. 168, 244 App.Div. 763.

Transfer of cause

Where justices qualified to hear appeal to appellate division of one judicial department are equally divided in opinion, court must, as provided by statute, direct transfer of appeal to appellate division of another department for hearing and determination.—Hurley v. Wyckoff, 11 N.Y.S.2d 878, transferred, see 13 N.Y.S.2d 891.

53. N.Y.—In re Association of Bar of City of New York, 227 N.Y.S. 1, 222 App.Div. 580.

Books and papers illegally detained

The court has inherent power to order the return of books or papers illegally detained by a public officer charged with the administration of the criminal law and this power can be exercised as against a supreme court justice acting as a magistrate.—In re Both, 193 N.Y.S. 822, 200 App.Div. 423, 39 N.Y.Cr. 446.

Original jurisdiction

While as a matter of administrative convenience the appellate division will ordinarily decline to take original jurisdiction, it has full power to do so, and may do so whenever

No justice of the appellate division can exercise in his department any of the powers of a justice of the supreme court other than those of a justice out of court and those pertaining to the appellate division or to the hearing and decisions of motions submitted by consent of counsel.⁵⁴

An appeal may be taken to the appellate division of the supreme court from a final judgment rendered in the supreme court upon a trial by a referee, or by the court without a jury, or upon the verdict of a jury, upon questions of law, or upon the facts, or upon both.⁵⁵ In some counties the appellate division of the supreme court has jurisdiction of appeals from the lower courts.⁵⁶ The appellate division, in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, may do that which the trial court should have done in the first instance,⁵⁷ and, at least in cases triable by the court without a jury, the appellate division may make new findings of fact.⁵⁸ The appellate division has the power to reverse, or affirm, wholly or partly, or to modify the order appealed from.⁵⁹ It has plenary power to review the acts of the special or trial terms of the supreme court in matters of discretion,⁶⁰ but it can review the discretionary power of the surrogate's court only so far as authorized by statute.⁶¹

Appellate and special terms. The appellate term of the supreme court, which under the constitution the appellate divisions in the first and second departments have power to establish, has jurisdiction of appeals from judgments or orders of the city and municipal courts of the city of New York.⁶² An appellate term may allow an appeal from its judgment to the appellate division,⁶³ but has no power to certify any question to the appellate division⁶⁴ or to limit its powers when an appeal is allowed.⁶⁵ Where judgment is entered by the municipal or city court, pursuant to a determination by the appellate term, the aggrieved party must obtain leave in order to appeal from the judgment directly to the appellate division.⁶⁶ The special term of the supreme court has such appellate jurisdiction as is conferred on it by law.⁶⁷ In some counties it has jurisdiction of appeals from the lower courts.⁶⁸

it sees fit.—In re Association of Bar of City of New York, 227 N.Y.S. 1, 223 App.Div. 580—Mitchel v. Cropsey, 164 N.Y.S. 336, 177 App.Div. 663—15 C.J. p 1103 note 45 [a].

Political activities of lawyers

Appellate division assumes no authority as to any general investigation of legislative acts or action of political conventions, and its powers are not adapted to inquiring into political activities of either lawyers or laymen.—Application of City Club of New York, 253 N.Y.S. 100, 233 App.Div. 351.

Under former provision of Civ. Pract. Act § 1317, supreme court could mandamus county court in criminal matter in which both courts had, for trial and sentence, concurrent jurisdiction.—People ex rel. Woodin v. Ottaway, 220 N.Y.S. 871, 129 Misc. 120, affirmed 224 N.Y.S. 887, 222 App.Div. 711, affirmed 161 N.E. 157, 247 N.Y. 493, reargument denied 163 N.E. 511, 248 N.Y. 527.

Affirmance on new findings

(1) The appellate division cannot upon new findings contrary to those made upon trial affirm the judgment of the special term but must direct a new trial.—Farrell v. Farrell, 98 N.E. 857, 205 N.Y. 450.

(2) On the other hand, it has also been held that the appellate division is not required to grant a new trial in an action tried before the court, where the judgment is right on the material facts as it finds them.—Levering & Garrigues Co. v. Century Holding Co., 150 N.Y.S. 649, 165 App. Div. 174.

§ 431. North Carolina

Particular rules and decisions relating to the North Carolina supreme and superior courts will be discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 432. — Supreme Court

The supreme court has jurisdiction of appeals from the superior court and has original jurisdiction to render advisory opinions on questions of law involved in claims against the state.

The constitution gives the supreme court jurisdiction to review on appeal any decision of the courts below upon any matter of law or legal inference, and to decide facts and issues of fact in equitable matters,⁶⁹ and power to issue any remedial writs necessary to give it a general supervision and control over the proceedings of the inferior courts.⁷⁰ It is purely an appellate court⁷¹ and it has no original jurisdiction except as to claims against the state,⁷² where its decision is purely recommendatory.⁷³ No process in the nature of execution can issue thereon,⁷⁴ but the decision must be reported to the next session of the general assembly for its action.⁷⁵

Appeal only from superior court

An appeal to the supreme court will lie only from the superior court.—State v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 29 S.E. 834, 122 N.C. 877. 15 C.J. p 1104 note 68 [b].

Mistake of court clerk

An appeal may be taken to the supreme court from an order of the superior court on a motion to vacate a judgment entered by the clerk because of the clerk's mistake, inadvertence, or neglect.—Caldwell v. Caldwell, 128 S.E. 329, 189 N.C. 805.

Supersedeas

The supreme court has no power to grant a supersedeas pending a petition to the United States supreme court for certiorari.—Seaboard Air-Line Ry. Co. v. Horton, 96 S.E. 954, 176 N.C. 115.

Reopening cause

(1) After a decision on an appeal has been rendered and certified, the court has no power to reopen its decree and modify it to conform to a settlement reached by the parties.—Town of Newton v. State Highway Commission, 139 S.E. 613, 194 N.C.

303, dismissing petition 138 S.E. 601, 194 N.C. 159.

(2) Parties cannot, by a motion to rehear the judgment, call upon the supreme court to specifically perform a contract of compromise, so as to try the facts of such agreement between the parties.—Neal v. Cowles, 71 N.C. 266.

§ 433. — Superior Courts

The superior courts have jurisdiction of appeals from the lower courts.

Superior courts have appellate jurisdiction of all issues of law or of fact, determined by a clerk of the superior court or a justice of the peace, and of all appeals from inferior courts for errors assigned in matters of law.⁷⁶ Under the constitution, appeals from inferior courts must be heard by the superior before they can be considered by the supreme court.⁷⁷

§ 434. North Dakota

Decisions dealing with the supreme court and the district court are discussed infra §§ 435, 436.

§ 435. — Supreme Court

The provisions of the constitution have been construed to vest in the supreme court: (1) Appellate jurisdiction; (2) general superintending control over inferior courts; (3) power to issue the writs specified, not only in the furtherance of other jurisdiction but also in the exercise of original jurisdiction; and (4) authority to issue such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of the jurisdiction vested in the court.

77. N.C.—Rhyne v. Lipscombe, 29 S.E. 57, 122 N.C. 650.

Statute providing for appeals directly to the supreme court from inferior courts is invalid and, if the statute fails to provide for an appeal to the superior court, that court may issue certiorari to review orders or judgments which are appealable.—Rhyne v. Lipscombe, supra.

The North Dakota supreme court is given by the constitution, except as otherwise provided, appellate jurisdiction only, which is coextensive with the state,⁷⁸ and a general superintending control over all inferior courts under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law.⁷⁹ It is also given power to issue writs⁸⁰ of habeas corpus,⁸¹ mandamus,⁸² quo warranto,⁸³ certiorari,⁸⁴ injunction,⁸⁵ and such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction.⁸⁶ These provisions have been construed to vest in the court: (1) Appellate jurisdiction. (2) General superintending control over inferior courts. (3) Power to issue the writs specified, not only in the furtherance of other jurisdiction, but also in the exercise of original jurisdiction. (4) Authority to issue such other original and remedial writs as may be necessary to the proper exercise of the jurisdiction vested in the court.⁸⁷ The court possesses such jurisdiction, and only such, as is either expressly or by necessary implication granted to it by these provisions in the constitution.⁸⁸

The writs named in the constitution are to be used by the supreme court to take original cognizance of a case as well as to aid and effectuate its other jurisdiction.⁸⁹ The court's jurisdiction to issue original writs, except those writs necessary to the proper exercise of appellate jurisdiction and to aid the court in its supervisory control over inferior courts, extends only to prerogative writs;⁹⁰ and such writs will issue only in cases publici juris wherein are directly involved the sovereignty of the state, its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberties of the citizens,⁹¹ and then only when the cir-

circumstances demanding such writ are so extraordinary and peremptory that to intrust their determination to, or await their adjudication in, inferior courts would result in failure or inadequacy of relief.⁹² The court is without jurisdiction to issue any writ other than those enumerated in the constitution, except where its issuance is necessary to the proper exercise of its jurisdiction in a pending cause, or to effectuate the court's general superintending control over inferior courts.⁹³

The supreme court's power to exercise general superintending control over inferior courts is a separate power, and applies to both civil and criminal proceedings.⁹⁴ The power of superintending control will not be exercised upon light occasions. It will be exercised only when there is no other adequate remedy and where the exigency is of such nature as obviously to justify the interposition of the general superintending power of the court.⁹⁵ In the exercise of this power the court may issue such original and remedial writs as are necessary to the proper exercise of such jurisdiction.⁹⁶ The limitation on its power to issue original or prerogative writs to cases publici juris wherein are directly involved the sovereignty of the state, its franchises or prerogatives, or the liberty of the citizens relates to the original or prerogative jurisdiction of the supreme court; and does not apply to the writs that may be issued by the court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction or its superintending control over inferior courts.⁹⁷

§ 437. Ohio

Decisions relating to particular Ohio courts will be considered in detail in the sections immediately following.

§ 438. — Supreme Court

The original and appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court is derived exclusively from the Ohio constitution.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court is derived exclusively from the Ohio constitution,⁹⁹ and the legislature has no power to limit or increase that jurisdiction.¹ Under the constitution, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction in cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of the state,² in cases of felony on leave first obtained,³ and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals,⁴ and it has such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law.⁵

Review of certified cases. Under the constitution in cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within the time prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court for review.⁶ Cases

Statute conferring jurisdiction in election contests

(1) The legislature in the exercise of the power conferred upon it by the constitution to determine before what authority, and in what manner the trial of contested elections shall be conducted may provide for a direct appeal from the court of common pleas to the supreme court in election contests.—Jolly v. Deeds, 21 N.E.2d 108, 135 Ohio St. 369.—Mehling v. Moorehead, 14 N.E.2d 15, 133 Ohio St. 395.

(2) Such direct appeals are addressed to the political rather than the judicial power of the supreme court.—Jolly v. Deeds, supra.

2. Ohio.—Travis v. Public Utilities

Commission of Ohio, 175 N.E. 586, 123 Ohio St. 355.

No denial of constitutional rights

(1) By an erroneous interpretation of statute.—Schoenl v. Warner White Co., 164 N.E. 534, 119 Ohio St. 460, dismissing petition 167 N.E. 598, 32 Ohio App. 59.

(2) By taking case from jury on ground of absence of evidence proving some essential averment of plaintiff's petition.—Keller v. Stark Electric Ry. Co., 130 N.E. 508, 102 Ohio St. 114.

Presentation of grounds of review

Where no motion is made to certify the record, the supreme court will not hear an error proceeding filed as of right because involving constitutional questions unless questions were presented to, and determined by court of first instance.—Thatcher v. Pennsylvania, O. & D. R. Co., 167 N.E. 682, 121 Ohio St. 205, affirming 168 N.E. 859, 33 Ohio App. 242.

Time and manner

Supreme court's jurisdiction over case involving constitution of United States, or state, must be invoked in manner and within time limited by statute.—Travis v. Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, 175 N.E. 586, 123 Ohio St. 355.

Where no debatable constitutional question is involved, the petition in error will be dismissed.—State v. Hill, 16 N.E.2d 945, 134 Ohio St. 354.—State v. Gardner, 10 N.E.2d 930, 133 Ohio St. 32.—Wolfe v. Wolfe, 187 N.E. 201, 127 Ohio St. 160, dismissing error 187 N.E. 86, 45 Ohio App. 309.—Fullerton v. Fullerton, 187 N.E. 21, 127 Ohio St. 102.—Elsaesser v. Geo. Golde, Inc., 187 N.E. 7, 127 Ohio St. 90.—Metzel v. Peerless Paper Box Co., 186 N.E. 733, 126 Ohio St. 643.—Copeland v. 4. Ohio.—Cohen v. Goldberger, 140 N.E. 514, 108 Ohio St. 243.
15 C.J. p 1106 note 99.

Intervention in court of appeals

(1) Where, after affirmance by the supreme court of a judgment, the claims of intervening petitioners were presented to, and determined by, the court of appeals, the case, in so far as it involved such claims, originated in the court of appeals.—Cohen v. Goldberger, supra.

(2) But intervention in court of appeals in case instituted in lower court will not under some circumstances make intervenor's case one originating in court of appeals.—Haldaday v. York Lake Co., 183 N.E. 791, 125 Ohio St. 608.

(3) Where a person is denied leave to intervene in the court of appeals, his case cannot be said to have originated in that court.—Betman v. Kuerze, 157 N.E. 487, 117 Ohio St. 225.

Only final orders or judgments are appealable.—Leashley v. Rezac, 7 N.E.2d 229, 132 Ohio St. 304.

Petition to vacate judgment of court of appeals on appeal from common pleas court did not transform case into one originating in former court.—Metzel v. Peerless Paper Box Co., 186 N.E. 733, 126 Ohio St. 643.

Original jurisdiction. The supreme court has no original jurisdiction except as provided by the constitution.¹⁰ Under the constitution it has original jurisdiction in quo warranto,¹¹ mandamus,¹² prohibition,¹³ habeas corpus,¹⁴ and procedendo; and no law may be passed or rule made preventing any person from invoking such jurisdiction.¹⁵ Under the terms of a schedule attached to the constitution, statutes antedating the adoption of the constitution are invalid to the extent that they impair the supreme court's original jurisdiction.¹⁶

§ 439. — Courts of Appeals

The original and appellate jurisdiction of the courts of appeals is derived exclusively from the Ohio constitution.

The appellate jurisdiction of the courts of appeals of Ohio is conferred by the state constitution,¹⁷ and the legislature is without power to increase or limit such jurisdiction,¹⁸ although it may prescribe methods of exercising it.¹⁹ Under the constitution the courts of appeals have appellate

Injunctions

(1) The supreme court has no original jurisdiction in an action where an injunction is the sole relief prayed for and not merely incident to a suit in quo warranto.—State v. Walters, 119 N.E. 137, 96 Ohio St. 807. 15 C.J. p 1106 note 89 [d] (1), (2).

(2) The allowance of an injunction as a temporary remedy, while a case is pending on error, is the exercise of appellate and not of original jurisdiction.—Yeoman v. Lasley, 36 Ohio St. 416.

Suit to set aside judgment of inferior court on ground of fraud held not within original jurisdiction of supreme court.—State v. Marsh, 169 N.E. 564, 121 Ohio St. 477.—State v. Marsh, 168 N.E. 473, 121 Ohio St. 321.

What constitutes chancery case generally

(1) The test as to whether an action constitutes a chancery case in Ohio is whether the action or proceeding was originally recognized as a subject of chancery jurisdiction before the adoption of the code of civil procedure.—Squire v. Bates, 5 N.E.2d 690, 132 Ohio St. 161—In re Gurnea's Estate, 146 N.E. 308, 111 Ohio St. 715—Clark v. Clark, 144 N.E. 743, 110 Ohio St. 644.

(2) The appealability of a case to the court of appeals, as a chancery case does not depend on whether or not the right and remedy are created by statute, but on whether the basic principle of the statute is equitable in character and based on some equitable doctrine.—Harper & Kirschten Shoe Co. v. S. & B. Shoe Co., 16 Ohio App. 387.

Particular cases held chancery cases

(1) Action brought under bulk sales law on an account, in which plaintiff prays for an accounting, that a receiver be appointed, and that one of the defendants be declared a trustee.—Harper & Kirschten Shoe Co. v. S. & B. Shoe Co., supra.

(2) Action construing a will creating a charitable trust.—Gearhart v. Richardson, 142 N.E. 890, 109 Ohio St. 418.

(3) Action for an accounting of the earnings and income derived from a trust fund.—Andrews Asphalt Paving Co. v. City of Middletown, 14 Ohio App. 436.

(4) Action to enjoin county auditor from changing tax returns.—Columbia Life Ins. Co. v. Hess, 162 N.E. 466, 28 Ohio App. 107, affirmed Hess v. Columbia Life Ins. Co., 156 N.E. 504, 116 Ohio St. 416.

(5) Action to foreclose mortgage of mechanic's lien on land.—Hummer v. Parsons, 146 N.E. 62, 111 Ohio St. 595.

(6) Action to quiet title.—Clark v. Clark, 144 N.E. 743, 110 Ohio St. 644.

(7) Other cases.—Best v. McClure, 141 N.E. 217, 108 Ohio St. 481.

Particular cases held not chancery cases

(1) Action by a creditor of a solvent estate against the executor thereof, to recover for service rendered and labor performed for the testate.—Yarian v. Stouffer, 14 Ohio App. 306.

(2) Action for money as a debt or as damages.—Complete Bldg. Show Co. v. Albertson, 121 N.E. 817, 99 Ohio St. 11.

(3) Proceeding in a juvenile court to have a child adjudged to be a dependent.—State v. Hoffman, 12 Ohio App. 341.

(4) Settlement in probate court of account of executor.—In re Gurnea's Estate, 146 N.E. 308, 111 Ohio St. 715.

(5) Settlement in probate court of account of testamentary trustee.—Squire v. Bates, 5 N.E.2d 690, 132 Ohio St. 161.

(6) Statutory proceeding challenging proceeding to incorporate village and praying for an injunction.—Sackett v. Irish, 11 Ohio App. 403.

(7) Statutory proceeding for the sale of an entailed estate.—Clark v. Clark, 144 N.E. 743, 110 Ohio St. 644.

(8) Suit, under statute, to recover back taxes illegally collected.—McBride v. University Club, 146 N.E. 804, 112 Ohio St. 69.

(9) Other cases.—In re Chipman's Estate, 13 Ohio App. 186—State v. Deneen, 28 Ohio Cir.Ct., N.S., 543, 544, 7 Ohio App. 117.

22. Ohio.—State v. Blair, 157 N.E. 801, 24 Ohio App. 413.

Only final judgments or final orders are reviewable.—Colby v. Price, 177 N.E. 382, 39 Ohio App. 198—Rothman v. I. Seldin & Kneller, 174 N.E. 794, 37 Ohio App. 408.

A final order is not reviewable unless it operates as a final determination of the rights of the parties in action and is thus included in the term "judgment."—McMahon v. Keller, 11 Ohio App. 410.

Chancery cases

The court of appeals has no original jurisdiction in chancery cases.—State v. Board of Education of Mad River Tp. Rural School Dist., 136 N.E. 196, 104 Ohio St. 360.

Injunctions

(1) The court of appeals has no original jurisdiction of suits for injunctions.—State v. Zangerle, 184 N.E. 32, 44 Ohio App. 65, affirmed 185 N.E. 69, 126 Ohio St. 247—State v. Board of Education of Mad River Tp. Rural School Dist., 136 N.E. 196, 104 Ohio St. 360.

stitution they have original jurisdiction in quo warranto,²⁷ mandamus,²⁸ habeas corpus, prohibition, and procedendo. Such original jurisdiction, however, cannot be exercised in cases involving the proceedings of administrative officers, to the extent that the legislature has conferred exclusive jurisdiction to revise the proceedings of administrative officers upon the supreme court.²⁹

Certifying record to supreme court. Whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgment upon which they have agreed conflicts with a judgment pronounced on the same question by another court of appeals, it is their duty to certify the record of the case to the supreme court;³⁰ but they are not authorized to certify the record where they find that their judgment conflicts with a judgment pronounced on the same question by a circuit court.³¹

Finality of judgments. Under the state constitution the judgments of the courts of appeals are final in all cases, except cases involving questions arising under the constitution of the United States or of the state,³² cases of which it has original jurisdiction,³³ cases of public or great general interest, in which the supreme court may direct the court of appeals to certify its record to that court,³⁴ and cases of felony.

§ 440. — Other Courts

The courts of common pleas, the courts of insolvency, and the general term of the superior court have appellate jurisdiction in certain cases.

Certain appellate jurisdiction with respect to inferior tribunals has been conferred upon the courts of common pleas,³⁵ the courts of insolvency,³⁶ and the general term of the superior court.³⁷ Where the probate and common pleas courts of a county have been combined, there is but one court, the court of common pleas, and an appeal from the probate division thereof, to the court itself, will not lie.³⁸

§ 441. Oklahoma

- a. Supreme court
- b. Other courts

a. Supreme Court

The supreme court of Oklahoma has appellate jurisdiction in all civil cases and a limited original jurisdiction, extending to a general superintending control over all inferior courts, commissions, and boards.

The supreme court is the highest court in Oklahoma's judicial system, and all other courts are inferior thereto.³⁹ Its appellate jurisdiction is derived exclusively from the constitution and laws

(2) Court of appeals could not, on original petition for mandamus, assume original jurisdiction of an injunction suit pending in court of common pleas.—State v. Zangerle, 184 N.E. 32, 44 Ohio App. 65, affirmed 185 N.E. 69, 126 Ohio St. 247.

Effect of cross petition or answer

Where the court of appeals would not have original jurisdiction of subject matter of cross petition or answer, if it were contained in a petition, it does not have such jurisdiction because contained in an answer or cross petition in response to a petition within its original jurisdiction.—State ex rel. Vastine v. City of Cincinnati, 11 N.E.2d 188, 56 Ohio App. 526.

15 C.J. p 1107 note 23.

Supreme court's jurisdiction of certified cases see § 438 supra.

Nature of conflict

(1) A court of appeals has no right to secure a review of its decisions by certifying record on ground that its judgment is in conflict with that of another court of appeals unless as a matter of fact there is an actual conflict on the same legal question.—Johnson v. Industrial Commission, 22 N.E.2d 921, 61 Ohio App. 535.

Finality of judgments

Neither constitution nor statutes of the state.⁴⁰ Under the constitution the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction which is coextensive with the state, and extends to all civil cases at law and in equity.⁴¹

Original jurisdiction. The supreme court has no original jurisdiction other than that conferred by the constitution or statutes enacted pursuant thereto.⁴² Under the constitution its original jurisdiction extends to a general superintending control over all inferior courts⁴³ and all commissions and boards⁴⁴ created by law. However, such superintending control can be exercised only in instances when such inferior courts⁴⁵ or commissions and boards⁴⁶ engage in the performance of judicial functions, or in the determination of any matter from which an appeal may be taken or to which certiorari, or other like writs, will lie. The supreme court also has power to issue writs of habeas corpus,⁴⁷ mandamus,⁴⁸ quo warranto,⁴⁹ certiorari,⁵⁰ prohibition,⁵¹ and such other remedial writs as may give any state court jurisdiction to review, modify, override, or vacate supreme court's final judgment under guise of any writ or process, and any attempt by any state court to do so is void, and must be so adjudged by supreme court, when brought to it for review.—Dancy v. Owens, supra.

Scope of review

Upon error to the supreme court for review of the action of a district court in a case brought there upon petition in error and bill of exceptions, only such matters as were properly before and acted upon by that court can be considered.—Muskogee Electric Traction Co. v. Waterson, 218 P. 796, 92 Okl. 183.

The criminal court of appeals is subject to the superintending control of the supreme court.—Dancy v. Owens, 258 P. 879, 126 Okl. 37.

Preventing judge from performing duties

The supreme court cannot issue a writ of superintending control to prevent a judge who has not been removed or suspended in the manner authorized by law from performing his official duties during his appeal from a felony conviction.—State ex rel. Murray v. Bozarth, 29 P.2d 579, 167 Okl. 321.

b. Other Courts

The Oklahoma criminal court of appeals is a statutory court of special and limited appellate jurisdiction. The district and superior courts have appellate jurisdiction in certain cases.

Under the Oklahoma constitution, authority is granted to the legislature to confer appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases on a criminal court of appeals.⁵⁸ The criminal court of appeals, created pursuant to the permissive authority thus vested in the legislature, is not a constitutional court.⁵⁹ Its jurisdiction exists and can be exercised solely by virtue of statute⁶⁰ and is special and limited.⁶¹ It has exclusive appellate jurisdiction in criminal causes,⁶² but no civil jurisdiction whatever.⁶³ With a few exceptions, its jurisdiction is limited to appeals⁶⁴ and proceedings in aid thereof.⁶⁵ In aid of its appellate jurisdiction it may issue writs of prohibition⁶⁶ or writs of mandamus⁶⁷ to inferior courts, but it is without power to issue writs of mandamus to public officers.⁶⁸ While it is without power to review the final judgments of the supreme court,⁶⁹ within the limits of its own jurisdiction its decisions are final.⁷⁰ It is the duty of the criminal court of appeals to see that a uniform system of criminal jurisprudence is followed.⁷¹

The appellate jurisdiction of courts in criminal cases generally is considered in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 1636, also 17 C.J. p 21 note 75-p 23 note 82.

Advisory opinions. The statute authorizing the governor to require the opinion of the judges of the criminal court of appeals, or any of them, upon the statement furnished by the judge of a court at which a conviction requiring a judgment of death is had contemplates an advisory opinion⁷² as to whether there has been an observance of all the formalities of law essential to the taking of human life, and whether the trial, conviction, and sentence of death have been in accordance with law,⁷³ which will be given only where an appeal has not been taken from the judgment and sentence of death, and the time for appeal has expired.⁷⁴

The district and superior courts have such appellate jurisdiction as is vested in them by statute.⁷⁵ A case pending on appeal in the county court from a justice of the peace court may be transferred on motion of plaintiff to the superior court.⁷⁶

The judicial authority of the supreme court extends to the review and correction of all proceedings of all inferior courts, except where such review is expressly excluded by statute, and it may issue all sorts of process, and use and adopt all sorts of legal forms necessary, to give effect to such supervisory authority.—Schmuck v. Hartman, 70 A. 1091, 222 Pa. 190.

removed from any other court of the state, and may examine and correct all manner of errors of the justices, magistrates, and courts of the state in process, proceedings, judgments, and decrees, and may reverse, modify, or affirm the same.⁹³ As appears in § 447 infra, certain cases are committed to the exclusive and final appellate jurisdiction of the superior court, including appeals from the common pleas, or orphans' courts involving less than an amount fixed by statute. Thus, while appeals lie directly to the supreme court from the decisions of the common pleas, or orphans' courts, if the amount in controversy exceeds the amount thus fixed,⁹⁴ the supreme court's jurisdiction does not extend to appeals involving less than such amount.⁹⁵ Even though a case falls within the general class of cases within the exclusive and final appellate jurisdiction of the superior court, an appeal may be taken to the supreme court if the case involves the construction or application of the state or federal constitution, or a statute or treaty of the United States;⁹⁶ or if the superior court, or a judge of the supreme court allows the appeal;⁹⁷ or if the jurisdiction of the superior court is in issue. Appeals erroneously taken to the supreme court, instead of to the superior court, must be remitted to the latter court.⁹⁸

Determination of amount

(1) In determining whether a case involves the necessary jurisdictional amount only the amount really in controversy is considered.—School Dist. of Baldwin Tp. v. Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Corporation, 194 A. 900, 328 Pa. 17, transferred, see 200 A. 885, 132 Pa. Super. 148.—In re Schuetz' Estate, 172 A. 865, 315 Pa. 105, remitted, see 174 A. 832, 114 Pa. Super. 602.

(2) In actions involving title or possession of property, jurisdiction is determined by the certificate of the judge as to value of the interest in controversy.—In re McGlinn's Estate, 113 A. 548, 270 Pa. 273.—Green v. Duffee, 80 A. 886, 231 Pa. 393.

Craig, 148 A. 709, 298 Pa. 411.—Sharp v. Keiser, 140 A. 772, 292 Pa. 142.—In re McGlinn's Estate, 113 A. 548, 270 Pa. 273.

(4) Ordinarily the verdict as rendered or as diminished by remittitur will be treated as correct amount of judgment, and the judgment cannot be raised above amount of verdict by including interest from date of verdict to date of judgment in the absence of special circumstances appearing in the record and warranting inclusion of interest in judgment.—Sharp v. Keiser, supra.

(5) If plaintiff recovers nothing the amount in controversy, is determined by the amount claimed in the statement of claim, or declaration, together with interest thereon.—Cara v. Newark Fire Ins. Co., 163 A. 289, 309 Pa. 71.

(6) The separate claims of separate appellants cannot be added.—In re Schuetz' Estate, 172 A. 865, 315 Pa. 105, remitted, see 174 A. 832, 114 Pa. Super. 602.—In re McGlinn's Estate, 113 A. 548, 270 Pa. 273.—15 C.J. p 1110 note 78 [c].

(7) Nor can separate claims of the same appellant be added.—In re McGlinn's Estate, supra.

(8) However, two or more awards to the same appellant in the same proceeding based on claims of the same nature may be treated as one.—Miller v. Myers, 149 A. 745, 299 Pa. 482.

Judges

(1) The supreme court has jurisdiction of an original quo warranto proceeding to oust the judges of the Philadelphia municipal court.—Com-

corpus; but they cannot exercise any other original jurisdiction.³ When the supreme court assumes jurisdiction in an original proceeding involving the same issues involved in a suit pending in a lower court, it may remove such suit from the lower court and dispose of it.⁴

§ 447. — Superior Court

The appellate and original jurisdiction of the superior court is purely statutory.

The jurisdiction of the Pennsylvania superior court is purely statutory.⁵ It is not a fact finding tribunal and does not weigh evidence,⁶ and has no original jurisdiction except that under the provisions of the statute it, or any judge thereof, has full power and authority to issue writs of habeas corpus returnable therein. It has exclusive and final appellate jurisdiction of all appeals in: (1) All proceedings in the court of quarter sessions of the peace or before any judge thereof, except cases involving the right to a public office.⁷ (2) All proceedings in the court of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery, except cases of felonious homicide.⁸ (3) Any action, claim, distribution, or dispute of any kind in the common pleas, at law or in equity, whether originating therein or reaching that court by appeal or certiorari from a justice of the peace or alderman, or magistrate, or any single claim, any dispute, distribution or other proceeding in the orphans' court, if the amount or value really in controversy is not greater than an amount fixed by statute,⁹ and if also the subject of the controversy is either money, chattels real or personal, or the possession of or title to real property, and if also the action, or other proceeding, is not brought, authorized, or defended by the attorney general in his official capacity. Appeals in proceedings for divorce must be taken to the superior court.¹⁰

The superior court has broad statutory powers in disposing of cases appealed thereto.¹¹ Appeals erroneously taken to the superior court, instead of the supreme court, must be certified to the latter court.¹² The superior court has no power to review the action of the supreme court in directing that an adjudication of the orphans' court should be open so that additional testimony might be taken.¹³

The Pennsylvania common pleas courts, the court of quarter sessions, and the county courts, may have appellate jurisdiction in certain cases.

The Rhode Island supreme court has final revisory and appellate jurisdiction of all questions of law and equity, and such other jurisdiction as has been conferred upon it by law, and it has power to issue prerogative writs.

Under the constitution of Rhode Island the supreme court has final, revisory, and appellate jurisdiction of all questions of law and equity.¹⁷ It also has power to issue prerogative writs,¹⁸ and such other jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by law.¹⁹ The supreme court judges are required by the constitution to give their written opinion upon any question of law whenever requested by the governor, or by either house of the general assembly.²⁰ It is also provided by statute that whenever in any action or proceeding pending before any court, the constitutionality of an act of the general assembly is brought in question on the record, the court shall forthwith certify the question to the supreme court to be heard and determined.²¹ The supreme court cannot entertain a petition by a probate judge and the interested par-

§ 450. South Carolina

Decisions relating to South Carolina courts possessing appellate jurisdiction will be discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 451. — Supreme Court

The South Carolina supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only in cases of chancery, and is a court for the correction of errors at law under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and it has limited original jurisdiction.

Under the South Carolina constitution the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only in cases of chancery,²⁴ and it is constituted a court for the correction of errors at law under such regulations as the general assembly may by law prescribe.²⁵

Original jurisdiction. The supreme court has only such original jurisdiction as has been conferred upon it by the constitution or statutes.²⁶ Under the constitution the supreme court has power to issue writs or orders of injunction,²⁷ mandamus,²⁸ quo warranto, prohibition, certiorari, habeas corpus, and other original and remedial writs.²⁹ The court will exercise its original jurisdiction only when it is shown that public interests are involved, or special grounds of emergency, or other good reasons exist.³⁰ Proceedings invoking its original jurisdiction are not civil "actions,"³¹ and the rules of procedure governing civil actions generally need not be applied thereto.³² Thus the court may acquire jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter involved merely by the service of a rule to show cause without a summons.³³ In exercising its original jurisdiction the court looks to the substance of things and not their form.³⁴

Court in banc. It is provided that whenever upon the hearing of any cause or question before the supreme court, in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction, it shall appear to the justices thereof, or any three of them, that there

§ 452. — Other Courts

South Carolina courts, other than the supreme court, have such appellate jurisdiction as is vested in them by the constitution or statutes.

South Carolina courts, other than the supreme court, have such appellate jurisdiction as is vested in them by the constitution and valid statutes.⁴⁰

§ 453. South Dakota

Decisions relating to South Dakota courts possessing appellate jurisdiction will be discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 454. — Supreme Court

The South Dakota supreme court has appellate jurisdiction and general superintending control over all inferior courts under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law. It has such original jurisdiction as is conferred by the constitution.

The South Dakota supreme court has, under the constitution, appellate jurisdiction⁴¹ which is coextensive with the state; and general superintending control over all inferior courts under such regulations and limitations as may be prescribed by law.⁴² None of the provisions of the constitution prohibits the legislature from limiting appeals to a defined class of cases.⁴³

Original jurisdiction. The supreme court has under the constitution, except as otherwise provided thereby, appellate jurisdiction only.⁴⁴ Under the constitution the supreme court has power to issue original and remedial writs,⁴⁵ including writs

The words "appellate jurisdiction" as used in this provision are not used in the limited sense employed in the constitutional provision defining the supreme court's jurisdiction, but embrace jurisdiction to correct errors at law, as well as appellate jurisdiction in chancery cases.—Sandel v. State, 122 S.E. 571, 128 S.C. 178, dismissing petition 119 S.E. 776, 126 S.C. 1, appeal dismissed 44 S.Ct. 5, 263 U.S. 672, 68 L.Ed. 500, and error dismissed 46 S.Ct. 100, 269 U.S. 532, 70 L.Ed. 397.

Exercise of power

The supreme court's power of general superintending control should be exercised only where sound judicial discretion clearly indicates the necessity for its use and will not ordinarily be exercised where another remedy exists, nor will it ordinarily be exercised as a substitute for appellate jurisdiction.—Pickus v. Perry, 239 N.W. 839, 59 S.D. 350, followed in Egbert v. Perry, 256 N.W. 372, 60 S.D. 1.

(2) But prohibition will not lie to restrain a ministerial act.—State v. Ewert, 156 N.W. 90, 36 S.D. 622.

of mandamus,⁴⁶ quo warranto,⁴⁷ certiorari,⁴⁸ and injunction.⁴⁹ The original jurisdiction of the supreme court cannot be invoked as a matter of right, but will be exercised only in the court's discretion.⁵⁰ It should be exercised when the interests of the state at large are directly involved in the preservation of its sovereign prerogatives or franchises, in the prevention of usurpation or invasion of its offices, or for the protection of the liberty of its citizens,⁵¹ especially when it is apparent that the issues involved must eventually be decided by the supreme court;⁵² but this jurisdiction will not be exercised to protect private or local rights, except when an application cannot properly be made to a subordinate court.⁵³

Any person aggrieved by the refusal of the state auditor to allow a just claim against the state may, by statute, institute an action in the supreme court,⁵⁴ except in the particular cases in which the legislature has authorized a suit in the circuit court.⁵⁵

Advisory opinions. The governor may require the opinion of the judges of the supreme court upon important questions of law involved in the exercise of his executive power upon solemn occasions.⁵⁶

§ 455. — Circuit Courts

The South Dakota circuit courts have such appellate jurisdiction as is conferred by law and power to issue original and remedial writs.

The South Dakota circuit courts have such appellate jurisdiction as may be conferred by law and as is consistent with the constitution. They and the judges thereof also have jurisdiction and power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, injunction and other original and remedial writs with authority to hear and determine the same.⁵⁷

§ 456. Tennessee

The Tennessee appellate courts can act only within their territorial jurisdiction. The circuit courts have appellate jurisdiction in certain cases.

Suits against public officers; parties

(1) Generally the supreme court will not exercise its original jurisdiction in suits to restrain public officers from an illegal act, unless the action is prosecuted in the name of the state upon the relation or information of attorney general; but where the attorney general refuses to prosecute the action and is made a party defendant the court will take jurisdiction of an action instituted by a taxpayer.—State ex rel. Circumstances warranting exercise of jurisdiction

Where an alternative writ had issued from the supreme court directing the superintendent of banks to ascertain amount due to petitioner, and certify same to depositors' guaranty fund commission, and was later argued and remained pending in the supreme court for over two years, it was held that, since during that period petitioner could not proceed elsewhere, fairness to petitioner required a disposition on the merits.—Parsons v. Smith, 205 N.W. 36, 48 S.D. 445.

late courts are limited to the correction of errors of tribunals located within their territorial jurisdiction.⁵⁸ The circuit courts have appellate jurisdiction of all suits and actions, unless otherwise provided, instituted before any inferior jurisdiction.⁵⁹

§ 457. — Supreme Court

The Tennessee supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only, and then only in a limited number of cases.

The supreme court of Tennessee is a constitutional court.⁶⁰ Its jurisdiction under the state constitution is appellate only,⁶¹ under such restrictions and regulations as may from time to time be prescribed by law,⁶² and it is beyond the power of the legislature to confer original jurisdiction upon it;⁶³ but it possesses such other jurisdiction as was conferred by law upon it at the time of the adoption of the constitution.⁶⁴ In all cases in which appellate jurisdiction is not conferred upon the court of appeals, the exclusive right of review is in the supreme court.⁶⁵ Appeals and writs of error, or other proceedings for the correction of error, lie from the inferior courts⁶⁶ and court of appeals⁶⁷ as provided by statute. A review of the facts in chancery cases presented to the supreme court on certiorari is permissible only to the extent that the findings of the chancellor and the court of appeals are shown by the record to be contradictory.⁶⁸ Where the supreme court has no jurisdic-

Auxiliary or incidental jurisdiction

One of the objects of its creation was to relieve the supreme court of the investigation of questions of fact in chancery causes, and give to the supreme court the benefit of findings by the court of appeals.—McCalla v. Rogers, 116 S.W.2d 1022, 173 Tenn. 239.

Effect on pending cases

(1) Under the act of 1925 creating the court of appeals and reorganizing the appellate courts system, all cases then pending before the court of civil appeals and undecided were transferred to the appellate court having jurisdiction of the case by the act.—Swing v. Harnaday, 1 Tenn.App. 568—Summers v. Kollock, 1 Tenn. App. 142.

(2) The provision for the transfer of pending cases did not authorize the transfer of cases from one section of the court of appeals to another.—Dunlap v. P'Pool, 1 Tenn.App. 173.

(3) In so far as the act of 1925 repealed provisions relating to the transfer of cases from one section of the court of civil appeals to another it was not retroactive.—Dunlap v. P'Pool, supra.

Decisions relating to court of civil appeals

(1) The appellate jurisdiction of the court of civil appeals extended to all cases brought up from courts of equity or chancery, except, among others, cases in which the amount involved exceeded one thousand dollars.—Lexington Compress Oil Mill Co. v. Nature of question

(1) In order to come within this exception the constitutional question must be substantial or bona fide.—Jones v. Anderson, 121 S.W.2d 542, 173 Tenn. 494—Williams v. Realty Development Co., 33 S.W.2d 64, 161 Tenn. 451—Brady v. Correll, 97 S.W.2d 448, 20 Tenn.App. 224.

(2) It is essential that the constitutional question be directly involved, not as an abstract, theoretical, or merely incidental issue, but as an issue presented in good faith substantially determinative of the rights asserted, or the defense relied on.—Howard & Herrin v. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 3 Tenn.App. 174. Prior to 1925

(1) Cases involving the constitutionality of state statutes were excepted from the jurisdiction of the court of civil appeals.—Schoenlau-Steiner Trunk Top & Veneer Co. v. Hilderbrand, 274 S.W. 543, 152 Tenn. 163—Clements v. Roberts, 231 S.W. 902, 144 Tenn. 152, denying rehearing 230 S.W. 30, 144 Tenn. 129—15 C.J. p 1114 note 51.

(2) This exception was held to extend to any case involving a constitutional question.—Going v. Going, 256 S.W. 590, 143 Tenn. 522, 31 A.L.R. 633—Clements v. Roberts, supra.

(3) But in order to fall within this exception it was essential that the constitutional question be directly involved, not as an abstract, theoretical or merely incidental issue, but as an issue presented in good faith, substantially determinative of the rights asserted.—Schoenlau-Steiner Trunk Top & Veneer Co. v. Hilderbrand, supra.

74. Prior to 1925, election contests were excepted from the jurisdiction of the court of civil appeals, and almost any controversy over an office was regarded as an election contest.—State v. Grindstaff, 234 S.W. 510, 144 Tenn. 554.

habeas corpus, and cases which have been finally determined in the lower court on demurrer or other method not involving a review or determination of the facts, or in which all the facts have been stipulated.⁷⁹ It is provided by statute that all cases within the jurisdiction of the court of appeals must for purposes of review be taken directly to the court of appeals in the division within which the case arose, and, as appears in § 457 supra, as to all other cases the exclusive right of review is in the supreme court. The character of the case presented in the lower court determines whether the court of appeals or the supreme court has jurisdiction.⁸⁰

§ 459. — Transfer of Cases

Cases erroneously removed by appeal or writ of error to the Tennessee supreme court, instead of the court of appeals, or vice versa, must be transferred to the proper court.

Cases which rightly belong to the Tennessee supreme court but which are removed by mistake to the court of appeals or vice versa, must,

by statute, be transferred to the proper court by the court to which they have been erroneously removed.⁸¹ This provision applies only to cases removed by appeal, or writ of error, to the wrong court, and not to cases in which the supreme court, or some member thereof, erroneously grants writs of certiorari and supersedeas removing a case to the supreme court.⁸²

§ 460. Texas

Decisions relating to appellate courts of Texas will be discussed in detail in the following sections.

§ 461. — Supreme Court

The supreme court has appellate jurisdiction extending to questions of law arising in cases of which the courts of civil appeals have appellate jurisdiction under such restrictions and regulations as the legislature has prescribed and it has power to issue various extraordinary writs in certain cases.

Under the constitution of Texas, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only, except as specified therein,⁸³ which is coextensive with the limits

Harnaday, 1 Tenn.App. 568—Summers v. Kolloc, 1 Tenn.App. 142.

That only questions of law are involved will not of itself deprive the court of appeals of jurisdiction.—Johnson v. Stuart, 299 S.W. 779, 155 Tenn. 618—Creasey v. Comargo Coal Co., 289 S.W. 524, 154 Tenn. 372—Cox v. Smith, 289 S.W. 524, 154 Tenn. 369—Lincoln County Bank v. Maddox, 114 S.W.2d 821, 21 Tenn.App. 648.

The method of trial in the lower court determines whether the court of appeals has appellate jurisdiction, and, unless that method precludes a determination in the lower court of the facts, the appeal lies to the court of appeals.—Garrett v. Garrett, 300 S.W. 9, 156 Tenn. 253—Cox v. Smith, 289 S.W. 524, 154 Tenn. 369—Williams v. Cantrell, Tenn.App., 124 S.W.2d 29—Lincoln County Bank

v. Maddox, 114 S.W.2d 821, 21 Tenn.App. 648.

Case heard on stipulated items of evidence rather than on a stipulation of all the facts held not within exception.—Cumberland Trust Co. v. Bart, 43 S.W.2d 379, 163 Tenn. 272.

Dispute as to inferences to be drawn from stipulated facts held not to render exception inapplicable.—King v. King, 51 S.W.2d 488, 164 Tenn. 666.

Where there are issues of fact to be passed upon, the court of appeals has jurisdiction under the statute.—Clemmons v. Haynes, 3 Tenn.App. 20.

(1) The same duty was imposed upon the court of civil appeals and the supreme court with respect to cases appealed to the wrong court.—State v. Brown, 257 S.W. 415, 148 Tenn. 647—Wright v. Curtis, 237 S.W. 1103, 145 Tenn. 623—Ault v. Drummond, 196 S.W. 393, 138 Tenn. 613—15 C.J. p 1114 note 61.

(2) Where an appeal was granted to the court of civil appeals but the appeal bond indicated an appeal to the supreme court and the transcript was filed in that court, it was held proper to transfer the case to the court of civil appeals.—Delap v. La Folette Nat. Bank, 190 S.W. 456, 136 Tenn. 494.

82. Tenn.—State of Georgia v. City of Chattanooga, 284 S.W. 359, 153 Tenn. 349.

83. Tex.—Morrow v. Corbin, 62 S.W.2d 641, 122 Tex. 553—Yett v. Cook, 268 S.W. 715, 115 Tex. 175. 15 C.J. p 1114 notes 63–65.

Advisory power

(1) While the supreme court has no advisory power under the constitution, the general statute authorizing certification in advance of decision by courts of civil appeals to the supreme court does not involve the exercise of purely advisory powers and is valid.—Morrow v. Corbin, 62 S.W.2d 641, 122 Tex. 553—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1064, reversed on other grounds Federal Royalty Co. v. State, 98 S.W.2d 993, 128 Tex. 324.

(2) But a statute permitting certified questions calling for advisory action only, and requiring no judgment or decree on which appellate power of court may act is invalid.—Smith Bros. v. Guardian Trust Co., 62 S.W.2d 655, 122 Tex. 577—Pond v. Matheson, 62 S.W.2d 654, 122 Tex. 580—Stennett v. Pfeiffer, 62 S.W.2d 652, 122 Tex. 582—Wright v. San Jacinto Trust Co., 62 S.W.2d 652, 122 Tex. 575—Morrow v. Corbin, 62 S.W.2d 641, 122 Tex. 553.

(3) A certificate granted under such statute must be dismissed.—Smith Bros. v. Guardian Trust Co., 62 S.W.2d 655, 122 Tex. 577—Pond v. Matheson, 62 S.W.2d 654, 122 Tex. 580—Stennett v. Pfeiffer, 62 S.W.2d of the state,⁸⁴ and extends to questions of law⁸⁵ arising in cases of which the courts of civil appeals have appellate jurisdiction,⁸⁶ under such restrictions and regulations as the legislature may prescribe.⁸⁷ The powers absolutely delegated to the supreme court by the constitution may be exercised without regard to statutory omissions or declarations.⁸⁸ Under the statutes enacted pursuant to the authority vested in the legislature, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of the state, extending to questions of law⁸⁹ arising in the following cases, when the same have been brought to the court of civil appeals by writ of error or appeal from final judgments of the trial courts:⁹⁰ (1) Those in which the judges of the courts of civil appeals disagree on any question of law material to the decision.⁹¹ (2) Those in which one of the courts of civil appeals holds differently⁹² from a prior decision⁹³ of its own,⁹⁴ or of another court of civil appeals,⁹⁵ or of the supreme Jurisdiction is not limited to questions of substantive law in the first five classes of cases set forth in Vernon's Civ.St. Annot. art 1728.—Compton v. Dannenbauer, 35 S.W.2d 682, 120 Tex. 14, 79 A.L.R. 1488, affirming Dannenbauer v. Messerer's Estate, Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 620.

Fact questions

(1) Supreme court's appellate jurisdiction does not extend to fact questions, whether invoked by certified questions or application for writ of error.—Ramin v. Cosio, 79 S.W.2d 617, 124 Tex. 471, dismissing certificate, Civ.App., 85 S.W.2d 802, and reversed on other grounds 113 S.W.2d 524, 131 Tex. 362—Anderson, Clayton & Co. v. Character of involvement

(1) The question as to the construction or validity of the statute must be necessary to a determination of the case.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mandamus to compel certification

(1) The supreme court will not compel the court of civil appeals by government,¹⁹ except the governor of the state. By virtue of statutory authorization, the court may also issue the writ of mandamus to compel a judge of the district court to proceed to trial and judgment in a cause,²⁰ or to compel any officer of the executive department of the state to perform any act or duty he is authorized to perform, whether such act be judicial, ministerial, or discretionary,²¹ or to compel any member of any executive, or primary, committee, or primary election officer of any political party to perform any duty imposed on them by law,²² and it may issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases where any person is restrained in his liberty by virtue of any order, process, or commitment issued by any court or judge on account of any order, judgment, or decree theretofore made, rendered, or entered by such court or judge in any civil cause. The supreme court will not exercise its original jurisdiction in cases in which an inferior court has concurrent jurisdiction, unless there is some unusual reason therefor.²³

§ 462. — Courts of Civil Appeals

The courts of civil appeals have appellate jurisdiction over the county and district courts in certain civil cases, which jurisdiction is final in certain cases. They also have limited original jurisdiction and power to issue mandamus to certify questions because of conflicting decisions in cases in which the supreme court has jurisdiction on appeal by writ of error.—Harris v. Willson, 59 S.W. 2d 106, 122 Tex. 323—Aldridge v. Conner, 37 S.W.2d 725, 120 Tex. 243—International & Great Northern R. Co. v. Pleasants, 296 S.W. 283, 116 Tex. 568—Maxwell v. Hall, 267 S.W. 670, 114 Tex. 319.

(2) But in cases within its final jurisdiction, the court of civil appeals may be compelled by mandamus to certify questions because its decision conflicts with an opinion of the supreme court or of another court of civil appeals.—Wright v. Dunklin, Tex., 123 S.W.2d 301—Atwood Cotton Breeding Farms v. Gallagher, 73 S.W.2d 525, 123 Tex. 505—Stone Fort Nat. Bank of Nacogdoches v. Hall, 62 S.W.2d 86, 122 Tex. 526—Citizens' Nat. Hall, 61 S.W.2d 985, 122 Tex. 547, ordering certification of questions Umberson v. Krueger, Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 528—Curlee Clothing Co. v. Hall, 60 S.W.2d 202, 123 Tex. 456, commanding certification of questions Curlee Clothing Co. v. Wickliffe, Civ.App., 38 S.W.2d 175—Harris v. Willson, 59 S.W.2d 106, 122 Tex. 323—Oliver v. Gallagher, 26 S.W.2d 903, 119 Tex. 178—Layton v. Hightower, 12 S.W.2d 110, 118 Tex. 166—Hinn v. Gallagher, 263 S.W. 132, 114 Tex. 322—Maxwell v. Hall, 267 S.W. 670, 114 Tex. 319—*Jacobs v. (3) Formerly, mandamus was available only in cases of conflicting decisions of the courts of civil appeals.—Garritty v. Rainey, 247 S.W. 825, 112 Tex. 369—Braumiller v. Burke, 230 S.W. 400, 111 Tex. 145—Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Conner, 229 S.

W. 844, 111 Tex. 99—15 C.J. p 1115 note 73 [a].

(4) The application therefor must be made in the supreme court within a reasonable time after the court of civil appeals has refused certification.—La Priele v. Key, 261 S.W. 366, 114 Tex. 1.

(5) The application should conform to the well-established rules of pleading.—Harris v. Willson, 59 S.W. 2d 106, 122 Tex. 323.

(6) The question of what constitutes conflicting decisions is discussed in § 462 infra.

19. "Officers of the state government" means only such officers as are charged with the general administration of state affairs, and not such persons as constitute a board of officers.—McFall v. State Board of Education, 110 S.W. 739, 101 Tex. 572—Betts v. Johnson, 73 S.W. 4, 96 Tex. 360—Herring v. Houston Nat. Exch. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 241 S.W. 534.

Persons held not state officers

(1) County judge.—Bostic v. County Judge of Rockwall County, 195 S.W. 186, 108 Tex. 421.

Correlative powers

The power to compel a judge to proceed to trial and judgment carries with it the correlative power to prohibit and enjoin other judges from proceeding.—Texas Farm Bureau Cotton Ass'n v. Lennox, 297 S.W. 743, 117 Tex. 94—Cleveland v. Ward, 285 S.W. 1063, 116 Tex. 1.

When action has been properly prohibited by the court of civil appeals, the supreme court will not is-

Jurisdiction will be exercised

(1) When relief has been refused by a court of civil appeals.—Dallas Railway & Terminal Co. v. Watkins, 86 S.W.2d 1081, 126 Tex. 116—Houtchens v. Mercer, 29 S.W.2d 1031, 119 Tex. 431, 69 A.L.R. 1103.

(2) When the circumstances are such that a court of civil appeals cannot grant relief without interfering with the judgment or order of another court of civil appeals.—Long v. Martin, 285 S.W. 1075, 116 Tex. 519.

(3) When the orderly processes of government have been disturbed and the case is such that the state as a whole is affected.—State v. Ferguson, Tex., 125 S.W.2d 272.

(4) When the delay resulting from an application to the district court would or might cause irreparable injury.—Love v. Wilcox, 28 S.W.2d 515, 119 Tex. 256, 70 A.L.R. 1484—Seagraves v. Green, 288 S.W. 417, 116 Tex. 220.

extraordinary writs, and power, and in some cases the duty, to certify questions to the supreme court.

Under the state constitution, the courts of civil appeals of Texas have appellate jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits of their respective districts, which extends to all civil cases of which the district or county courts have original or appellate jurisdiction,²⁴ under such restrictions and regulations as may be prescribed by law.²⁵ Other jurisdiction, original and appellate, may be conferred on the courts of civil appeals by law.²⁶ Under the statutes, the appellate jurisdiction of the courts of civil appeals extends to civil cases²⁷ within the limits of their respective districts,²⁸ of which the district and county courts have or assume jurisdiction²⁹ when the amount in controversy, or the judgment rendered, exceeds one hundred dollars, exclusive of interest and costs.³⁰ The

Advisory powers

(1) Courts of civil appeals have no advisory power under organic law, and none can be conferred on them by the legislature.—Morrow v. Corbin, supra.

(2) A statute permitting certified questions from the district courts to the courts of civil appeals calling for advisory action only, and requiring no judgment or decree on which the appellate power of the court may act is invalid.—*Pond v. Amount claimed in petition does not fix the amount in controversy where it appears on the face of the pleadings that a portion of the items sued for could form no proper basis for suit.—Dunn v. Wilkerson, Tex.Civ.App., 203 S.W. 59.

Amount of counterclaim cannot be added to plaintiff's demand in determining the amount involved; one of the demands separately considered must exceed the jurisdictional amount.—Martinez v. Viola, Tex.Civ.App., 276 S.W. 769.

Amendment on appeal to county court, increasing the demand to an amount within the appellate jurisdiction of the court of civil appeals but beyond the original jurisdiction of the trial court, cannot be allowed.—Dunn v. Wilkerson, Tex.Civ.App., 203 S.W. 59.

Interest, as damages, may be included in determining the amount involved.—McClendon v. Homeseekers' Realty Co., Tex.Civ.App., 272 S.W. 216.

In ancillary suit for injunction against the institution of proceedings interfering with the enforcement of plaintiff's judgment against defendant, the amount in controversy is the amount of the judgment.—Universal Credit Co. v. Cunningham, Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 699.

In garnishment proceeding, although it is ancillary to the main action, when interest on the original judgment and the costs of the original action are properly made a part of plaintiff's demand, the amount in controversy is not limited to the amount of the original judgment but includes accrued interest thereon and the original costs.—Fannin County Nat. Bank v. Gross, Tex.Civ.App., 200 S.W. 187.

right of appeal has been regulated by statutes and an appeal must conform to some one of the methods provided before the court of civil appeals acquires jurisdiction.³¹

The courts also have statutory power, on affidavit or otherwise, as they may deem proper, to ascertain such matters of fact as may be necessary to the proper exercise of their jurisdiction;³² and they also have been given power to punish for contempt, such punishment not to exceed one thousand dollars fine or imprisonment for twenty days.

Finality of judgments. The judgments of the courts of civil appeals are conclusive in all cases

15 C.J. p 1118 note 40.

Scope and extent of power generally

(1) The court of civil appeals is without jurisdiction to issue extraordinary writs except in aid of its own jurisdiction.—Yantis v. McCallum, Tex.Civ.App., 121 S.W.2d 610.—Adams v. Mitchell, Tex.Civ.App., 86 S.W.2d 884.—Life Ins. Co. of Virginia v. Sanders, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 348.—City of Farmersville v. Texas-Louisiana Power Co., Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 271.

(2) In exercising its power to issue extraordinary writs, the court is not limited by the statute confining its appellate jurisdiction to courts within its district.—National Debenture Corporation v. Adams, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 757.—Buffalo Engineering Co. v. Welch, Tex.Civ.App., 61 S.W.2d 855.—Reed v. Bryant, Tex.Civ.App., 291 S.W. 605.

(3) The court has power to prevent interference with its judgments, including judgments affirmed by it, by the issuance of appropriate writs.—Elder v. Byrd-Frost, Inc., Tex.Civ. App., 110 S.W.2d 172.—Cunningham v. Universal Credit Co., Tex.Civ.App., 92 S.W.2d 1097.—Nash v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 79 S.W.2d 182.—*Texas Nat. Bank v. (4) But one court of civil appeals cannot prevent interference with the judgments of another court of civil appeals.—Farrell v. Young, Tex.Civ. App., 23 S.W.2d 468.

(5) As an incident to its power to prevent interference with its judgments, the court may determine whether the maintenance of a particular suit constitutes such interference.—State v. Epperson, 42 S.W.2d 228, 121 Tex. 80.

(6) Acts held to constitute an interference with judgment or encroachment on court's jurisdiction.—Nash v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 79 S.W.2d 182.—Life Ins. Co. of Virginia v. Sanders, Tex.Civ. App., 62 S.W.2d 348.

(7) Acts held not to constitute an interference with judgment or encroachment on court's jurisdiction.—Stanolind Oil & Gas Co. v. Railroad Commission of Texas, Tex.Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 633.—Stanolind Oil & Gas Co. v. Edgar, Tex.Civ.App., 107 S.W.2d 631.

Injunction

(1) The court cannot issue injunctions except in aid of its own jurisdiction.—Antner v. State, Tex.Civ. App., 114 S.W.2d 640.—Beard v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 85 S.W.2d 843.—Shelton v. City of Abilene, Tex.Civ. App., 75 S.W.2d 934.—Hardy v. City of Throckmorton, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 1104.—*Madison v. (5) But if the appeal is effected simply by cost bond, the court is not authorized to grant an injunction.—Cleveland v. Alpine Lumber Co., supra.

(6) On an appeal from an order or judgment refusing an injunction, the court has been held to be without jurisdiction to grant a temporary injunction pending the determination of the appeal.—Shelton v. City of Abilene, Tex.Civ.App., 75 S.W.2d 934—City of Farmersville v. Texas-Louisiana Power Co., Tex.Civ.App., 33 S.W.2d 271—Taylor v. American Trust & Savings Bank of El Paso, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W. 727—Texas Electric & Ice Co. v. City of Vernon, Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W. 503.

(7) But an injunction has been issued in such case where it was necessary to insure the effective operation of any judgment the court might render on the appeal.—Madison v. Martinez, Tex.Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 84.

Prohibition

(1) The court of civil appeals has power in a proper case to issue an original writ of prohibition.—City of Houston v. City of Palestine, 267 S.W. 663, 114 Tex. 306, dismissing writ City of Palestine v. City of Houston, Civ.App., 262 S.W. 215—National Debenture Corporation v. Adams, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 757.

(2) The court cannot issue writs of prohibition except in aid of its own jurisdiction.—Cunningham v. Universal Credit Co., Tex.Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 1097—Adams v. Mitchell, Tex.Civ.App., 86 S.W.2d 884—Cleveland v. Alpine Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 257—Bell v. Young, Tex.Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 135—15 C.J. p 1118 note 40 [d].

(3) The court can also issue such writs in aid of its jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus to compel a judge to proceed to trial and judgment.—National Debenture Corporation v. Adams, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 757.

(4) The court can also issue such writs to prevent interference with its judgments.—Long v. Martin, 287 S.W. 494, 116 Tex. 135—Morse v. Scott, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 1041—Elder v. (5) This jurisdiction continues until its judgment has been completely executed.—Pierce v. Box, Tex.Civ.App., 284 S.W. 231—City of Palestine v. City of Houston, Civ.App., 262 S.W. 215, error dismissed City of Houston v. City of Palestine, 267 S.W. 663, 114 Tex. 306.

(6) The court's jurisdiction continues until it is lost by granting and perfecting of writ of error by supreme court.—City of Palestine v. City of Houston, supra.

(7) The court on application for writ of prohibition, can determine validity of statute, where act interfering with court's jurisdiction was done in pursuance of such statute.—Life Ins. Co. of Virginia v. Sanders, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 348.

(8) The court cannot grant a writ pending appeal effected simply by cost bond.—Cleveland v. Alpine Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 257.

(9) Other matters see Cleveland v. Alpine Lumber Co., supra. 15 C.J. p 1118 note 40 [d].

15 C.J. p 1119 note 41.

Scope and extent of power generally

(1) A judge can be compelled to proceed only when there is a "cause" pending before him.—City of Big Spring v. Garlington, Tex.Civ.App., 88 S.W.2d 1095—Barnett v. Sutton, Tex.Civ.App., 31 S.W.2d 887.

(2) "The power to order one judge to proceed . . . does of itself, necessarily imply the power to prohibit all other judges from interference with obedience to such order."—National Debenture Corporation v. Adams, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 757, 761.

(3) A writ can rightly issue only when the judge improperly refuses to act on a matter within his jurisdiction.—Cleveland v. Ward, 285 S.W. 1063, 116 Tex. 1—American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Sutton, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 441—Cleveland v. Home Nat. Bank of Cleburne, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W. 734—Home Nat. Bank of Cleburne v. Wilson, Tex.Civ.App., 265 S.W. 732.

(4) Where no appeal was perfected by either party, the court has been held to be without jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus.—Wichita Falls Traction Co. v. Cook, Tex.Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 422.

Power to order particular acts

(1) Ordinarily, the court of civil appeals cannot control a judge as to the character of judgment to be entered.—Allen v. Strode, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 289—Harris v. O'Brien, Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 277.

(2) The court has power to compel a judge to render and enter a

Certification of questions. The statutes provide for the certification of questions from the courts of civil appeals to the supreme court⁴⁹ when an issue of law arises which the court of civil appeals deems it advisable to present to the supreme court for adjudication,⁵⁰ when one of the judges of a judgment on a verdict.—Chaffin v. Drane, Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 672.—American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Sutton, Tex.Civ.App., 130 S.W.2d 441.—Friske v. Graham, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 139.—Allen v. Strode, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 289.

(3) The court may direct a judge to set aside an order setting aside a judgment and granting a new trial, made after the judgment had become final.—Houston Lighting & Power Co. v. Boyd, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 934.

(4) It is without power to compel a judge to set aside an order sustaining a demurrer to a bill.—Yantis v. McCallum, Tex.Civ.App., 121 S.W.2d 610.

49. Certification of entire case

(1) The court of civil appeals should formulate the specific question of law to be determined by the supreme court and should not certify the entire case.—State v. Robb & Rowley United, 114 S.W.2d 225, 131 Tex. 188.—City of Fort Worth v. Burnett, 112 S.W.2d 702, 131 Tex. 34.—Southwestern Drug Corporation v. Taylor, 101 S.W.2d 550, 129 Tex. 5, answer to certified question conformed to, Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 883.—Jones v. Wynne, 98 S.W.2d 177, 128 Tex. 279.—Scanlan v. Continental Inv. Co., 87 S.W.2d 476, 126 Tex. 401, conformed to, Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 1189.—Douglas Oil Co. v. State, 76 S.W.2d 1043, 124 Tex. 232, reversed on other grounds Federal Royalty Co. v. State, 98 S.W.2d 993, 128 Tex. 324.—Wyatt C. Hedrick, Inc. v. Ratcliff, 58 S.W.2d 41, 122 Tex. 313, dismissing certificate, 63 S.W.2d 877, 122 Tex. 313, error refused.—Chicago, R. I. & G. Ry. Co. v. Harris, 24 S.W.2d 385, 119 Tex. 65.—First Nat. Bank v. Zorn, 299 S.W. 847, 117 Tex. 180.—Taylor v. Higgins Oil & Fuel Co., 293 S.W. 891, 117 Tex. 149.—Owens v. Tedford, 269 S.W. 418, 114 Tex. 390.—Hollis v. Parkland Corporation, Tex.Com.App., 29 S.W.2d 309.—Board of Equalization of City of Fort Worth v. McDonald, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 806, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 129 S.W.2d 1135.—Turman v. Turman, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 947, error dismissed, certiorari denied 57 S.Ct. 933, 301 U.S. 698, 81 L.Ed. 1353, rehearing denied 58 S.Ct. 7, 302 U.S. 774, 82 L.Ed. 600—15 C.J. p 1119 note 44 [c].

(2) Thus, a certificate presenting question whether judgment was correct cannot be considered.—First Nat. Bank v. Zorn, 299 S.W. 847, 117 Tex. 180.—Taylor v. Higgins Oil & Fuel Co., 293 S.W. 891, 117 Tex. 149.

(3) Where there was but one controlling question in the case, certification was denied on the ground that it would be tantamount to certifying the entire case.—Board of Equalization of City of Fort Worth v. McDonald, supra.

(4) On the other hand, it has been stated that the fact that the answers to the proposed questions for certification would be determinative of the entire case does not preclude certification.—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1064, reversed on other grounds, Federal Royalty Co. v. State, 98 S.W.2d 993, 128 Tex. 324.

Time for certification

The court of civil appeals has no jurisdiction to certify questions after the expiration of the term at which it finally disposed of the case.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 280 S.W. 542, 115 Tex. 238, vacating and dismissing certified question 277 S.W. 96, 115 Tex. 121, which answered certified question, Civ.App., 198 S.W. 600.—La Puelle v. Key, 261 S.W. 366, 114 Tex. 1.—Dillingham v. Roberts Ice Co., Tex.Civ.App., 101 S.W.2d 1042—15 C.J. p 1119 note 44 [b].

50. Tex.—First Nat. Bank v. Zorn, 299 S.W. 847, 117 Tex. 180.—Taylor v. Higgins Oil & Fuel Co., 293 S.W. 891, 117 Tex. 149.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Gorman, 245 S.W. 418, 112 Tex. 147.—Wilson v. Giraud, 195 S.W. 848, 113 Tex. 3.

15 C.J. p 1119 notes 44–46.

Exercise of power generally

(1) The court will certify only when the particular circumstances make certification advisable.—Wyllie v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 979, error dismissed.—Ladd v. Yett, Tex.Civ.App., 273 S.W. 1006.—Davis v. Simmons, Tex.Civ.App., 240 S.W. 970, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Peveto, Tex.Civ.App., 224 S.W. 552, reversed on other grounds Peveto v. Texas & N. O. R. Co., Com.App., 238 S.W. 892.

(2) The court will certify where the case would otherwise become moot before a supreme court adjudication could be had, such as cases involving questions of outstanding importance to the jurisprudence of the state and of first impression, and in which its jurisdiction is final.—Wyllie v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 979, error dismissed.

(3) The court will refuse to certify where it has no doubt as to correctness of its holding.—Scannell v. Scannell, Tex.Civ.App., 117 S.W.2d 538.—Chambers v. First Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 58.—Eidel- bach v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 1067, error dismissed.—Lubbock Independent School Dist. v. Lubbock Hotel Co., Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 271.—Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Martin, Tex.Civ.App., 274 S.W. 181, reversed on other grounds Martin v. Southern Pine Lumber Co., Com.App., 284 S.W. 918.

15 C.J. p 1119 note 46 [I].

When writ of error will lie, the court of civil appeals will not ordinarily certify questions to the supreme court.—Edwards v. Gifford, Tex.Civ.App., 132 S.W.2d 155, error granted.—Sportatorium, Inc. v. State, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 483, error dismissed.—Cannon Ball Motor Freight Lines v. Grasso, Tex.Civ.App., 59 S.W.2d 337, affirmed Grasso v. Cannon Ball Freight Lines, 81 S.W.2d 482, 125 Tex. 154.—Weldmer v. Stott, Tex.Civ.App., 48 S.W.2d 389, error refused.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Pearlstone Mill & Elevator Co., Tex.Civ.App., 37 S.W.2d 299, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 53 S.W.2d 1001.—Elk Mfg. Co. v. Citizens' Nat. Bank of Abilene, Tex.Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 747, reversed on other grounds Citizens' Nat. Bank of Abilene v. Elk Mfg. Co., Com.App., 29 S.W.2d 1062.—Marnett Oil & Gas Co. v. Munsey, Tex.Civ.App., 232 S.W. 867, reversed on other grounds Munsey v. Marnett Oil & Gas Co., 254 S.W. 311, 113 Tex. 212—15 C.J. p 1119 note 44 [a].

Where jurisdiction final

(1) The court of civil appeals may certify questions arising in cases within its final jurisdiction.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Gorman, 245 S.W. 418, 112 Tex. 147.—American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Tabor, 230 S.W. 397, 111 Tex. 155.—Perry v. Greer, 221 S.W. 981, 110 Tex. 549.—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Lovell, 221 S.W. 929, 110 Tex. 546, answering certified questions, Civ.App., 179 S.W. 1111, and answers conformed to 223 S.W. 1024.—Wilson v. Giraud, 195 S.W. 848, 113 Tex. 3—15 C.J. p 1119 note 46 [d].

(2) But on appeals from interlocutory orders when it is important that the case be tried on its merits as soon as possible, the court will refuse to certify.—Lubbock Independent School Dist. v. Lubbock Hotel Co., Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 274.—Gilmore v. Sammons, Tex.Civ.App., 269 S.W. 861.

Where jurisdiction original

Questions arising in cases within the original jurisdiction of the court of civil appeals should not be certified and cannot be answered by the supreme court.—Quinn v. Halbrook, court of civil appeals dissents as to any conclusion of law material to the decision of the case,⁵¹ or when the court's decision is in conflict with an opinion of the supreme court, or of another court of civil appeals, on any question of law.⁵² In answering a question certified from the court of civil ap-

Character of questions which may be certified or answered

(1) Only questions of law may be certified and answered.—McCullough v. McCullough, 36 S.W.2d 459, 120 Tex. 209, answering certified questions, Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 224, rehearing denied 39 S.W.2d 105—Bluitt v. Pearson, 7 S.W.2d 524, 117 Tex. 467, answering certified questions in part, Civ.App., 8 S.W.2d 310—Gerneth v. Galbraith-Foxworth Lumber Co., 300 S.W. 17, 117 Tex. 205, answers to certified questions conformed to, Civ.App., 6 S.W.2d 215—Taylor v. Higgins Oil & Fuel Co., 298 S.W. 891, 117 Tex. 149—Owens v. Tedford, 269 S.W. 418, 114 Tex. 390—Sovereign Camp, W. O. W., v. Ayers, 261 S.W. 1000, 113 Tex. 564—Taylor v. Higgins Oil & Fuel Co., Tex.Civ.App., 2 S.W.2d 283, error dismissed—15 C.J. p 1119 note 46 [m].

(2) More precisely, only questions of law arising on the record on appeal may be certified.—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1064, reversed on other grounds Federal Royalty Co. v. State, 98 S.W.2d 993, 128 Tex. 324.

(3) Certified question held one of fact.—McCullough v. McCullough, 36 S.W.2d 459, 120 Tex. 209, answering certified questions, Civ.App., 20 S.W.2d 224, rehearing denied 39 S.W.2d 105.

(4) Questions in such form that an answer would not be decisive and conclusive of an issue of law in the case should not be certified and cannot be answered.—Ramin v. Cosio, 79 S.W.2d 617, 124 Tex. 471, dismissing certificate, Civ.App., 35 S.W.2d 802, and reversed on other grounds 113 S.W.2d 524, 131 Tex. 362—Owens v. Tedford, 269 S.W. 418, 114 Tex. 390.

(5) The same rule applies to hypothetical or abstract questions.—Ramin v. Cosio, supra—County Democratic Executive Committee in and for Bexar County v. Booker, 52 S.W.2d 908, 122 Tex. 89—Pullman Co. v. Hays, 271 S.W. 1108, 114 Tex. 490, answering certified questions, Civ.App., 257 S.W. 686—Owens v. Tedford, 269 S.W. 418, 114 Tex. 390—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), Civ.App., 81 S.W.2d 1064, reversed on other grounds Federal Royalty Co. v. State, 98 S.W.2d 993, 128 Tex. 324—15 C.J. p 1119 note 46 [b], [c].

(6) Question is "abstract," where court of civil appeals has manifestly entered correct judgment regardless of answer to question.—County Democratic Executive Committee in and for Bexar County v. Booker, supra.

(7) Questions which have become abstract because of answers to other certified questions are likewise not required to be answered.—City of Amarillo v. Stapf, 101 S.W.2d 229, 129 Tex. 81—Hurt v. Cooper, Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 929, conforming to certified questions 110 S.W.2d 896, 130 Tex. 433.

(8) Where all members of court of civil appeals agreed that answer to certified question was necessary to disposition of appeal, supreme court would resolve doubt in favor of materiality of question and return answer.—Westbrook v. Houston Chronicle Pub. Co., 102 S.W.2d 197, 129 Tex. 95.

(9) Supreme court refused to answer certified questions where any answer made would create implications concerning principal law question which was not certified.—Gillespie v. Fuller Const. Co., 61 S.W.2d 977, 122 Tex. 506, dismissing certificate, Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 798, error refused.

Sufficiency of certificate

The certificate should contain all the facts required to answer the question certified.—Ramin v. Cosio, 79 S.W.2d 617, 124 Tex. 471, dismissing certificate, Civ.App., 35 S.W.2d 802, and reversed on other grounds 113 S.W.2d 524, 131 Tex. 362—Brown v. Johnson, 299 S.W. 862, 117 Tex. 199.

15 C.J. p 1119 note 46 [e].

Tentative opinion

The certificate of the court of civil appeals must be accompanied by the court's tentative opinion, except in an emergency case, in which case the certificate must set forth the reasons or circumstances giving rise to an emergency, the supreme court being free to determine whether they do so.—City of Fort Worth v. Burnett, 112 S.W.2d 702, 131 Tex. 34.

Effect of answers

(1) The supreme court's answers are res judicata as to the questions certified.—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), 81 S.W.2d 1064, reversed on other grounds Federal Royalty Co. v. State, 98 S.W.2d 993, 128 Tex. 324.

(2) Such answers are binding on the court of civil appeals.—County Democratic Executive Committee in and for Bexar County v. Booker, 52 S.W.2d 908, 122 Tex. 89—Hurt v.

Cooper, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 929, conforming to certified questions 110 S.W.2d 896, 130 Tex. 433—Jones v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 1012—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), supra.

(3) But the application of such answers to the record for the purpose of determining the judgment to be rendered is for the court of civil appeals.—Douglas Oil Co. v. State (Whiteside Case), supra.

(4) The court of civil appeals may dispose of all questions not certified, as though no certification had been made.—Glenn v. Dallas County Bois D'Arc Island Levee Dist., Civ.App., 282 S.W. 339, reversing 275 S.W. 137, conforming to answers, 288 S.W. 452, 114 Tex. 325, and reversed on other grounds Dallas County Bois D'Arc Island Levee Dist. v. Glenn, Com. App., 288 S.W. 165.

(5) It will not remand the case for further proceedings, but will render judgment in accordance with supreme court's decision.—Hurt v. Cooper, Civ. App., 113 S.W.2d 929, conforming to certified questions 110 S.W.2d 896, 130 Tex. 433.

51. Tex.—Sellers v. Puckett, Civ. App., 180 S.W. 639.
15 C.J. p 1119 notes 44, 45, p 1120 note 47.

In cases within court's final jurisdiction, the filing of a dissent does not require certification.—Perry v. Greer, 221 S.W. 931, 110 Tex. 549—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Lovell, 221 S.W. 929, 110 Tex. 546, answering certified questions, Civ. App., 179 S.W. 1111, and answers conformed to 223 S.W. 1024—Wilson v. Giraud, 195 S.W. 848, 113 Tex. 3—Fleming-Stitzer Road Bldg. Co. v. Boyett, Tex.Civ.App., 253 S.W. 561—Walker v. Walter, Tex.Civ.App., 241 S.W. 524—15 C.J. p 1120 note 47 [f], [g].

Abstract questions should not be certified and cannot be answered.—Owens v. Tedford, 269 S.W. 418, 114 Tex. 390.

Only questions of law should be certified.—McCrary v. McCrary, Tex. Civ.App., 230 S.W. 187.

Points of dissent must appear in order to afford a basis for a certificate of dissent.—Cameron County Water Improvement Dist. No. 1 v. Tomiyasu, Tex.Civ.App., 35 S.W.2d 506—15 C.J. p 1120 note 47 [i].

52. Tex.—Harris v. Willson, 59 S.W. 2d 106, 122 Tex. 323—Layton v. Hightower, 12 S.W.2d 110, 118 Tex. 166—Roddy v. Fly, 272 S.W. 437, 114 Tex. 515—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Willson, 261 S.W. 368, 113

peals, the supreme court may predicate the answer solely on the statement of the case as contained in the certificate.⁵³

What constitutes a conflict of decisions. A conflict of decisions within the meaning of the statutory provision conferring jurisdiction on the supreme court in certain such cases, or of the rule authorizing the supreme court to issue writs of mandamus to compel the courts of civil appeals to certify in certain of such cases, both of which appear in § 461 supra, or of the related provisions, set forth in this section supra, excepting such cases from the final jurisdiction of the courts of civil appeals, and requiring such courts to certify in such cases, must be on a question of law involved and determined, and such that one decision would overrule the other if both were rendered by the same court; in other words, the decisions must be based practically on the same state of facts and announce antagonistic conclusions.⁵⁴ In all in-

15 C.J. p 1119 notes 44, 45, p 1120 note 48.

Certification is mandatory in cases falling within the terms of the statute.—Wright v. Dunklin, Tex., 123 S.W.2d 301.

Question as to whether decision is in conflict with certain decisions of other courts should not be certified and cannot be answered.—Owens v. Tedford, 269 S.W. 418, 114 Tex. 390.

When writ of error is refused by the supreme court because the judgment of the court of civil appeals is correct, a motion to certify will be denied.—Trico Oil Co. v. Pelton, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 539, denying motion 114 S.W.2d 1209.

Finality of decision as affecting power or duty

(1) Certification is not required in cases in which a writ of error will lie.—Gulf Production Co. v. Warren, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 616, error refused, certiorari denied Oakwood Realty Co. v. Gulf Production Co., 58 S.Ct. 27, 302 U.S. 707, 82 L.Ed. 546—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Mallard, Tex.Civ.App., 262 S.W. 789, affirmed, Com.App., 277 S.W. 1051—McMahan v. City of Abilene, Tex.Civ.App., 261 S.W. 455, error dismissed City of Abilene v. McMahan, Com.App., 292 S.W. 525—Ketch v. Weaver Bros., Tex.Civ.App., 261 S.W. 380, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 276 S.W. 676—Braumiller v. Burke, Tex.Civ.App., 232 S.W. 907.

(2) The court may, however, certify in cases in which its jurisdiction is final, that is, where a writ of error will not lie.—Perry v. Greer, 221 S.W. 931, 110 Tex. 549—Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Lovell, 221 S.W. 929, 110 Tex. 546, answering certified questions, Civ.App., 179 S.W. 1111, and answers conformed to 223 S.W. 1024.

(3) But on appeals from interlocutory orders, the court will refuse to certify where it is important that the case be tried on its merits as soon as possible.—Gillmore v. Sammons, Tex.Civ.App., 269 S.W. 861.

Rehearing of motion to certify will be denied where the supreme court overruled moving party's motion asking leave of that court to file a petition for a writ of mandamus requiring the court of civil appeals to certify.—Trico Oil Co. v. Pelton, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 539, denying motion 114 S.W.2d 1209.

Under earlier statute, conflict with a supreme court decision did not require certification.—Stuart v. Meyer, Tex.Civ.App., 196 S.W. 615, error refused—Warren v. Willson, 192 S.W. 529, 108 Tex. 262—15 C.J. p 1120 note 48 [1].

§ 463. — Other Courts

The Texas court of criminal appeals has final appellate jurisdiction in criminal matters and power to issue writs necessary to enforce its jurisdiction. The district and county courts have limited appellate jurisdiction.

Under the constitution and statutes of Texas the court of criminal appeals has appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the limits of the state, in all criminal cases of whatever grade,⁵⁷ with such exceptions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.⁵⁸ Its jurisdiction is final in criminal cases.⁵⁹ The court and the judges thereof under the constitution and statutes have power to issue the writ of habeas corpus,⁶⁰ and, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, to issue such writs as may be necessary to enforce the jurisdiction of the court.⁶¹ The legislature has given the court and the judges thereof express power to issue writs of mandamus⁶² and certiorari,⁶³ agreeably to the principles of law regarding such writs, whenever necessary to enforce the court's jurisdiction. While the court of criminal appeals is not a nisi prius court,⁶⁴ under the constitution and statutes it has power, on affidavit or otherwise, to ascertain such matters of fact as may be necessary to the exercise of its jurisdiction.⁶⁵

The appellate jurisdiction of courts generally in criminal matters is considered in the title Criminal Law § 1636, also 17 C.J. p 21 note 75—p 23 note 80.

District and county courts. The constitution and statutes also give certain appellate jurisdiction in small cases to the district courts⁶⁶ and to the coun-

Later decision of another court of civil appeals, rendered after the supreme court had denied an application for a writ of error, will not afford a basis for conflict.—Trico Oil Co. v. Pelton, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 539, denying motion 114 S.W.2d 1209.

Overruled decisions will not afford a basis for "conflict."—Hanchett v. Ward, Tex.Com.App., 65 S.W.2d 268, dismissing error Ward v. Hanchett, Civ.App., 47 S.W.2d 360—15 C.J. p 1116 note 86 [b].

Recorded opinion is controlling and the court will not go behind it for the purpose of producing a conflict.—Thacker v. Lindahl, Tex.Com.App., 43 S.W.2d 588, affirming Lindahl v. Thacker, Civ.App., 26 S.W.2d 283.

Unreported cases, not regarded as authority by supreme court, were held not to afford a basis for "conflict."—City of Wichita Falls v. Mauldin, Tex.Com.App., 39 S.W.2d 859, affirming, Civ.App., 23 S.W.2d 771.

§ 464. Utah

Decisions relating to the Utah supreme and district courts are considered in the sections immediately following.

§ 465. — Supreme Court

Except for original jurisdiction vested in it to issue certain writs, the supreme court of Utah has appellate jurisdiction only.

The Utah supreme court has original jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus,⁶⁸ certiorari,⁶⁹ prohibition,⁷⁰ quo warranto,⁷¹ and habeas corpus.⁷² In other cases,⁷³ the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction only, and power to issue writs necessary and proper for the exercise of that jurisdiction.⁷⁴ The supreme court is the exclusive judge of its own jurisdiction.⁷⁵ man v. Schwind, Civ.App., 186 S. W. 282—Hurley v. Hirsch, Civ.App., 66 S.W.2d 387.

67. Tex.—Kubish v. State, 84 S.W.2d 480, 128 Tex.Cr. 666.
15 C.J. p 1121 note 60.

68. Utah.—Woolley v. Wight, 238 P. 1114, 65 Utah 619, 41 A.L.R. 433—State v. Morse, 87 P. 705, 31 Utah 213, 7 L.R.A., N.S., 1127.
15 C.J. p 1121 note 62.

Where application for writ of prohibition reveals situation calling for type of relief more nearly analogous to purpose of writ of mandamus, and neither standing alone would bring about desired result, supreme court is authorized to issue both writs of mandamus and prohibition.—Child v. Ogden State Bank, 20 P.2d 599, 81 Utah 464, 88 A.L.R. 1284.

Forwarding statement of school population

In a proceeding by divers school districts to review proceedings of the board of education of a district with respect to the apportionment and distribution of school funds by the state, where the parties have stipulated that the controversy might be determined upon its merits, the supreme court can properly grant a mandatory order requiring the clerk of defendant board to forward a true statement of the school population of defendant district in accordance with the enumeration made by the enumerators of the district, and further requiring superintendents to make apportionments in accordance with such enumeration.—Board of Education of Alpine School Dist., Utah County, v. Board of Education of Salt Lake City, 219 P. 542, 62 Utah 392.

69. Utah.—Robinson v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct., 113 P. 1026, 38 Utah 379.

15 C.J. p 1121 note 63.

Whether trial court had exceeded or was without its jurisdiction in making and entering judgment complained of, only may be determined in original proceeding in supreme court to review proceedings in district court and to annul the judgment therein.—Jeffries v. Third Judicial Dist. Court of Salt Lake County, 63 P.2d 242, 90 Utah 525.

Sufficiency of pleadings

Where the lower court determines that a complaint or information does not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action or an offense, the supreme court will not review such decision or stay further proceedings thereon by writ of prohibition.—Atwood v. Cox, 55 P.2d 377, 88 Utah 437.

Common-law functions of writ are not a restriction on the court which may issue prohibition against the exercise of a ministerial function in excess of or without authority, and the constitutional grant of power to issue the writ is interpreted in the light of the enlarged definition thereof given by territorial legislation.—Barnes v. Lehi City, 279 P. 878, 74 Utah 321.

At relation of private party

In absence of urgent necessity, jurisdiction in quo warranto will not be assumed by the supreme court at the relation of a private party, as

§ 474. Washington

Decisions relating to the supreme and superior courts of Washington are discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 475. — Supreme Court

The Washington supreme court has, with certain exceptions, appellate jurisdiction in all actions and proceedings, and it also possesses original jurisdiction in habeas corpus, quo warranto and mandamus as to all state officers.

The supreme court is vested with original jurisdiction, as prescribed by the constitution,³ in habeas corpus,⁴ quo warranto,⁵ and mandamus,⁶ as to all state officers.⁷ It has appellate jurisdiction in all actions and proceedings as defined by the constitution,⁸ excepting that its appellate jurisdiction does not extend to civil actions at law for the recovery of money or personal property when the original amount in controversy or the value of the property does not exceed the sum of two hundred dollars,⁹ unless the action involves, among other things, the legality of a tax,¹⁰ or the validity of a Proceeding to recover on judgment for costs being independent of action in which judgment was rendered, amount of costs recovered by judgment determines appellate jurisdiction of supreme court.—State v. Smith, 173 P. 428, 102 Wash. 574.

Separate actions

Where separate actions are brought against same defendant, in determining the amount involved on the question of jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition to prevent trial of the actions, the jurisdictional amount is determined by that in each action, and not the aggregate amount sought in the four actions.—State v. Hurn, 180 P. 400, 106 Wash. 362.

§ 476. — Superior Courts

The superior courts of Washington have such appellate jurisdiction as is provided by law.

The superior courts have such appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in inferior courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law.¹⁹

15 C.J. p 1124 note 37.

Applications for writs regarded interchangeable

The supreme court treats applications for extraordinary writs interchangeably so that if application is made in terms for a particular writ and it appears from the record that relator is not entitled to the writ applied for, but is entitled to another writ, the application will be treated as made for the proper writ.—State ex rel. Meehan v. Superior Court for King County, 74 P.2d 1012, 193 Wash. 249.

Equity powers in aid of appellate jurisdiction

Supreme court in aid of appellate jurisdiction possesses all inherent power of courts of equity and, when a party is denied relief to which in equity and good conscience he is entitled, it is its duty to find some method within its jurisdiction by which such relief may be granted.—State v. Superior Court for King County, 163 P. 765, 95 Wash. 258.

Injunctive relief

(1) Power to enjoin performance of act by public officer does not pertain to the duties of the supreme court whose jurisdiction is revisory and appellate.—State v. Darwin, 142 P. 441, 81 Wash. 1.

§ 477. West Virginia

Decisions relating to the West Virginia supreme court of appeals and the circuit courts are discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 478. — Supreme Court of Appeals

The supreme court of appeals of West Virginia has original jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus, mandamus, and prohibition. It has appellate jurisdiction in civil cases where the matter in controversy is greater than one hundred dollars, and in such other cases as the constitution and valid statutes provide.

The supreme court of appeals under the authorities has original jurisdiction²⁰ in cases of habeas

(2) On original application to the supreme court, injunction will not be granted merely because the petitioner is respondent in an action on appeal in the same court, since the supreme court's jurisdiction to grant injunctive relief is limited to cases where the appeal would be rendered ineffectual by a continuance of the acts restrained, plaintiff's remedy being to enforce the writ of superseas, or, if the acts were not within it, an action in the court of original jurisdiction.—Van Siclen v. Muir, 87 P. 498, 44 Wash. 361.

Original petition under declaratory judgment act will be denied where it calls for further relief involving an adjudication of questions not raised by the appeal and which were beyond the original jurisdiction of the reviewing court.—*Schoenwald v. Limited original jurisdiction

(1) The original jurisdiction of the court is limited to the cases named in the constitution.—State v. Houchins, supra.

(2) The court is not given original jurisdiction to award injunctions.—Deitz Colliery Co. v. Ott, 129 S.E. 708, 99 W.Va. 653.

(3) The court has no original jurisdiction on the petition of an employer to review by certiorari the corpus,²¹ and has such jurisdiction in mandamus,²² and prohibition.²³ It is also, by statute, vested with original jurisdiction to review the orders of the public service commission.²⁴ It has appellate jurisdiction in civil cases,²⁵ where the matter in controversy, exclusive of costs, is of greater value or amount than one hundred dollars;²⁶ in controversies concerning, among other things, the titles or boundaries of land,²⁷ or concerning the right of a corporation or county to levy tolls or taxes;²⁸ in cases of mandamus²⁹ or certiorari;³⁰ in cases involving the constitutionality of a law;³¹ and such other appellate jurisdiction as may be prescribed by law.³²

§ 479. — Circuit Courts

The circuit courts in West Virginia have appellate jurisdiction over inferior tribunals.

The circuit court has supervision and control over all proceedings before inferior tribunals by mandamus, prohibition, and certiorari,³³ and appellate jurisdiction in all cases, civil and criminal, where an appeal, writ of error, or other appellate process may be allowed to the judgment or proceedings of any inferior tribunal.³⁴ It has also such other supervisory or appellate jurisdiction as is provided by law.³⁵

§ 480. Wisconsin

Decisions relating to Wisconsin appellate courts are discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 481. — Supreme Court

The constitution of the state of Wisconsin grants the supreme court appellate, superintending, and original jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court is conaction of the state compensation commissioner in awarding compensation.—Deitz Colliery Co. v. Ott, supra.

Legislature may enlarge somewhat the scope of the court's original jurisdiction by bringing in matters not included within the scope of the writs at common law.—United Fuel Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, 80 S.E. 931, 73 W.Va. 571—15 C.J. p 1124 note 43 [b].

21. Bail

(1) The supreme court of appeals has original jurisdiction to award a writ of habeas corpus having for its sole purpose the obtaining of bail in a felony case, and to grant bail on it.—Ex parte Hill, 41 S.E. 903, 51 W.Va. 586.

Original jurisdiction. The supreme court is vested by the constitution with original jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus,⁵⁸ mandamus,⁵⁹ injunction,⁶⁰ quo warranto,⁶¹ certiorari,⁶² and other original and remedial writs,⁶³ and with power to hear and determine the same.⁶⁴ The supreme court has power to exclude inferior courts from any interference with the exercise of its original jurisdiction in a proper case.⁶⁵ The original jurisdiction of the supreme court should be invoked by a petition for leave.⁶⁶ court will not exercise its original jurisdiction where questions of fact are involved.⁷⁴

The legislature, by virtue of the constitutional provision that "the legislature shall direct by law in what manner and in what courts suits may be brought against the state," may vest the supreme court with original jurisdiction of suits brought against the state.⁷⁵ The supreme court may also have original jurisdiction of an action under the Declaratory Judgment Act, since such statute does not enlarge the court's jurisdiction, but merely authorizes the court to take jurisdiction at an earlier point than it ordinarily would.⁷⁶

§ 483. Wyoming

Decisions relating to the Wyoming supreme and district courts are discussed in the sections immediately following.

§ 484. — Supreme Court

The supreme court of Wyoming has general appellate jurisdiction; general superintending control over all inferior courts; and original jurisdiction in quo warranto and mandamus as to all state officers, and in habeas corpus.

The supreme court has general appellate jurisdiction coextensive with the state,⁸¹ and general superintending control over all inferior courts under such rules as may be prescribed by law.⁸² It may also issue writs of mandamus,⁸³ review, prohibition,⁸⁴ habeas corpus, certiorari,⁸⁵ and other writs necessary and proper to the complete exercise of its appellate and revisory jurisdiction.⁸⁶ The court has only such original jurisdiction as is conferred by the constitution,⁸⁷ namely, in quo warranto⁸⁸ and mandamus,⁸⁹ as to all state officers,⁹⁰ and in habeas corpus,⁹¹ and will issue such writs only when necessary and proper.⁹²

consequently the supreme court in the exercise of its superintending or revisory power lacks original jurisdiction to issue a writ of prohibition against him.—State v. True, 184 P. 229, 26 Wyo. 314.

Where facts are disputed and the district court has jurisdiction which will afford satisfactory relief, the supreme court will not exercise its original jurisdiction in quo warranto for contest at election of district judge on ground that, if action were brought in district court, contestant would be at mercy of his opponent, since opponent is disqualified and could be required to call in another judge.—State ex rel. § 485. — District Courts

The district courts of Wyoming have such appellate jurisdiction as is vested in them by law.

The district courts of Wyoming have such appellate jurisdiction in cases arising in inferior courts and tribunals in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law.⁹³

X. CONCURRENT AND CONFLICTING JURISDICTION

A. Courts of Same State

1. MATTERS OF JURISDICTION

§ 486. Exclusive or Concurrent Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of a particular court may be either concurrent or exclusive, and where exclusive can be exercised by no other court.

The jurisdiction of a particular court may, in accordance with the constitutional or statutory provisions by which it is established, be either exclusive or concurrent,⁹⁴ the terms having already been defined and distinguished in § 18 of this treatise. Where exclusive jurisdiction is either expressly or by necessary implication conferred upon a court, no other court may exercise such jurisdiction⁹⁵ unless the case is brought within some exception to the grant.⁹⁶ Constitutional provisions defining the jurisdiction of particular courts should be harmonized, if possible, so that each court, whether trial or appellate, may exercise the power conferred upon it without conflict with the authority confided to other tribunals.⁹⁷

§ 487. — Grant of Exclusive Jurisdiction

A grant of exclusive jurisdiction may be either express or by clear implication.

Where jurisdiction over particular subject matters is conferred in express terms upon one court and not upon another, it has been held that it is the intention that the jurisdiction conferred shall be exclusive,⁹⁸ although it has also been held to the contrary that the use of the term "jurisdiction" alone, without qualifying terms, does not necessarily preclude the possession of concurrent jurisdiction by other courts.⁹⁹ For example, where a new right or cause of action is created by a statute providing the particular tribunal which shall take cognizance thereof, no other court has jurisdiction;¹ but, where a remedy entirely new is conferred upon courts of record generally, all courts of record may take the power although if merely an additional ground for invoking an existing remedy is added it is applicable only to courts exercising the jurisdiction to which the addition is made.² Where original and exclusive jurisdiction is conferred upon one court, another court which formerly possessed such jurisdiction is deprived thereof.³ The effect of a constitutional grant of exclusive jurisdiction as a restriction upon the legislative power as to courts has been discussed in § 124 supra.

§ 488. — Grant of Concurrent Jurisdiction

As to matters as to which courts have concurrent jurisdiction, they are of equal dignity, and the conferring of concurrent jurisdiction upon a court does not of itself deprive other courts of similar jurisdiction theretofore possessed by them.

There is nothing in the inherent nature of jurisdiction which precludes two or more courts from having concurrent jurisdiction of the same subject matter, and, subject to constitutional restrictions considered supra § 122, when constitution or statute vests jurisdiction in any tribunal without use of the qualifying term "exclusive" or its equivalent, the legislature may in its discretion vest the like jurisdiction in another court or tribunal.⁴ Courts of concurrent jurisdiction are courts of equal dignity as to the matters concurrently cognizable,⁵ neither having supervisory power over process from the other,⁶ and, as shown infra § 492, the one first exercising such jurisdiction acquires control to the exclusion of the other.

A court is not ousted of the jurisdiction which it possesses over a subject by a subsequent legislative enactment conferring jurisdiction over the same subject on another court⁷ or other tribunal,⁸ unless such an intention is plainly manifested either by the words of the statute or by a necessary implication therefrom;⁹ and, unless expressly limited in the grant of coördinate jurisdiction to a new tribunal, the powers of the tribunal to which the new authority is granted are to be deemed coextensive with those of the court formerly possessing exclusive power.¹⁰

The giving of jurisdiction to a lower court concurrent with that of an appellate court does mean that such jurisdiction shall be exclusive and final.¹¹

Contractual provisions purporting to deprive a court of its constitutional or statutory concurrent jurisdiction are invalid.¹²

Under Rev.St. c 67 § 2, providing that courts of probate shall have jurisdiction in equity concurrent with the supreme judicial court of all cases relating to administration of estates, etc., the word "concurrent" does not mean exclusive or final, for that would negative the right to resort to the law court, but the lower court has final jurisdiction subject to appeal.—*Norris v. § 489. — Election of Tribunal

Plaintiff may select which of two courts of concurrent jurisdiction he will proceed in, but having once made his election is bound thereby.

Where two courts have concurrent jurisdiction a party may elect to bring his action in either,¹³ and when his election is made it is binding upon him,¹⁴ and, as shown infra § 492, the court in which the action is first brought ordinarily has exclusive jurisdiction of that particular case, so that the pendency of the cause of action in one court is ground for abatement of the same suit in another court, as discussed in Abatement and Revival § 17.

§ 490. — Jurisdiction of Particular Courts

- a. Courts of justices of the peace
- b. Probate, orphans', surrogates', and similar courts
- c. Other particular courts

a. Courts of Justices of the Peace

The jurisdiction of justices of the peace is ordinarily not exclusive except as to cases involving small amounts, but is concurrent with that of other courts.

Other courts,¹⁵ such as circuit courts,¹⁶ district courts,¹⁷ municipal courts,¹⁸ police courts,¹⁹ and superior courts,²⁰ usually have jurisdiction concurrent with that given justices of the peace, the nature and scope of whose jurisdiction generally are considered in the C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace § 26, also 35 C.J. p 487 note 26—p 491 note 56, and the fact that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace may be extended to cases originally cognizable in other courts exclusively will not take away the jurisdiction of the latter.²¹ In some jurisdictions, however, the constitution or statute confers upon justices exclusive jurisdiction in certain cases,²² generally where the amount in controversy does not exceed a certain sum,²³ or provides for ex-

Computation of value

(1) Under code provisions conferring exclusive jurisdiction on justices' courts in all cases in law where the value of the property in controversy amounts to one thousand dollars or less, justice's court, class A, had original and exclusive jurisdiction of action for possession of personal property where complaint alleged that value of property was seven hundred and fifty dollars and that value of use of property from time of detention was four hundred dollars, since the main object of the proceeding was worth less than a thousand dollars and the value of the use was merely incidental. The fact that plaintiff was entitled to reasonable attorney's fee under contract which provided that defendant would pay ten per cent as attorney's fee in case suit was instituted to collect contract price of the property did not deprive the justice's court of jurisdiction, as the seven hundred and fifty dollar value plus the seventy-five dollar attorney fee would be eight hundred and twenty-five dollars, or less than one thousand dollars.—Holm v. Davis, 47 P.2d 537, 8 Cal.App.2d 328.

(2) Where plaintiff sued on alleged note for two hundred and fifty dollars, but judgment was rendered for only one hundred and forty five dollars, such fact did not make case one within exclusive jurisdiction of clusive jurisdiction of certain sums and for concurrent jurisdiction of larger sums not exceeding a certain amount.²⁴ Where exclusive jurisdiction resides in another court, the justice court may not take cognizance of the case,²⁵ and where exclusive jurisdiction rests in the justice's court no other court may take jurisdiction.²⁶ Under statute it has been held that a county court has no concurrent jurisdiction with a magistrate's court, but on the contrary is an appellate court to which appeals from a magistrate's court may be taken;²⁷ and it has also been held that county courts have no general jurisdiction over justices' courts, and no authority to enforce the enforcement of judgments or executions in aid thereof unless the amount involved is within the jurisdiction of the county court.²⁸

Where another court is given concurrent jurisdiction with a justice's court it impliedly follows that such other court has precisely the same powers in respect of such concurrent matters as the justice's court.²⁹

Criminal jurisdiction. The exclusive and concurrent jurisdiction of justices over criminal offenses is considered in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 126, also 16 C.J. p 159 note 78—p 160 note 82.

b. Probate, Orphans', Surrogates', and Similar Courts

The original jurisdiction of courts of probate is ordinarily exclusive as to matters falling within their cognizance, although this is subject to the qualification that where the court of probate cannot afford complete and adequate relief jurisdiction may rest with another court, and that under the provisions of applicable laws jurisdiction of particular matters may be either exclusive or concurrent; neither a court of probate nor another court may invade the exclusive jurisdiction of the other.

The jurisdiction of probate courts, which has been considered supra §§ 298, 300-304, is frequently exclusive with respect to matters ordinarily falling within the cognizance of such courts³⁰ save as their acts may be subject to review by appellate courts,³¹ justice's court, inasmuch as the amount demanded by plaintiff in complaint, and not the amount for which the judgment is rendered, determines matter of jurisdiction, except where sum is claimed fraudulently to confer jurisdiction.—Nations v. Lindley, Tex.Civ.App., 275 S.W. 163.

Ownership of deposit certificates of intestate

Unless suit to determine ownership of deposit certificates allegedly given to plaintiff by defendant's intestate was proper one for equity cognizance, probate court had exclusive jurisdiction to determine ownership thereof, and petition was held to state cause of action at law against defendant bank on such certificates, in view of bank's answer consisting substantially of pleading in nature of bill of interpleader, although where defendant bank filed pleading in nature of bill of interpleader, circuit court had original jurisdiction, and could entertain cause as suit in equity, in absence of any attack on pleadings or objection to jurisdiction.—Phillips v. Exclusive and concurrent character of jurisdiction defined

Probate court authorized by Burns St.Annot.1926 § 1753 et seq (Burns St.Annot.1914 § 1806 et seq), has exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters pertaining to appointment of trustees and settlement of trust, and concurrent jurisdiction of all actions by and against executors, administrators, guardians, assignees, and ties may operate to divest other courts of such counties of the probate jurisdiction which they formerly possessed;⁴¹ but, where there is no distinct probate court, probate powers may be conferred on courts also exercising a general jurisdiction, such as county and district courts, as shown supra § 299, and the rules heretofore set forth respecting the exclusive or concurrent character of the jurisdiction of probate courts also apply to such courts of general jurisdiction when sitting as courts of probate.⁴² In some states exclusive original jurisdiction over decedents' estates is conferred on county courts of general jurisdiction when sitting in probate,⁴³ except as statute or special circumtrustees.—Henkel v. Indiana Nat. Bank, supra.

Partition among heirs

Probate court has exclusive jurisdiction to partition deceased's land among heirs, where no question of title is involved.—Le Fors v. Le Fors, Tex.Civ.App., 41 S.W.2d 517, error dismissed.

Limitations on amount

Under constitutional provisions to the effect that county courts shall have original jurisdiction of all probate matters where the amount involved does not exceed two thousand dollars, except that as respects decedents' estates the limitation as to amount shall not apply, only county court had original jurisdiction of testamentary trusts involving more than two thousand dollars where settlement of estate could not be accomplished until trusts should be fully executed, the court saying: "The distinction is found in the intention of the testator. If he intend to establish a trust free of the administration of the county court, his estate is settled 'after the payment in full of all debts and legacies,' and only the jurisdiction of the district court, when properly invoked, would attach. But where he intends that the administration of his estate shall continue after the payment in full of all debts and legacies, his estate is not to be considered settled until the trust or trusts created by his will have been fully executed, and the jurisdiction of the county court must be sought."—Kingdom of Yugo-Slavia v. Jovanovich, 69 P.2d 311, 314, 100 Colo. 406.

Foreclosure of mortgage given by decedent and collection of debts

County court, not district court, was proper forum to foreclose mortgage given by decedent and collect debt, since mortgagee can obtain all rightful relief against estate of deceased mortgagor in county court, which may sell the land to pay the debt. Neither joinder of minor child of deceased mortgagor in foreclosure proceeding nor joinder of junior mortgagee without alleging it has an unpaid claim authorized foreclosing mortgage of decedent in district in place of probate court.

stances may change the rule,⁴⁴ as where the remedy in the county court is incomplete,⁴⁵ and auxiliary or appellate jurisdiction is conferred on the district courts,⁴⁶ or the jurisdiction of the county and district courts is concurrent as to certain matters;⁴⁷ and the mere fact that a decedent's estate is incidentally involved will not deprive a district court of jurisdiction over matters falling primarily within the scope of its powers rather than within that of the county court.⁴⁸ In other jurisdictions

While separate property of wife, which was mortgaged to secure debt of deceased husband, may not be subjected to payment in probate proceedings, in foreclosing mortgage of decedent and wife, proceedings may not be had in district court rather than probate court by reason of mortgage covering wife's separate property.—*Reynolds Mortg. W.Va.—Page v. Huddleston, 126 S.E. 579, 98 W.Va. 104.

Case not within exceptions

District court was without jurisdiction of suit to foreclose vendor's lien on lands of decedent and recover deficiency, such matter not falling within any of the recognized exceptions to the constitutional provisions giving the county court jurisdiction in matters relating to the settlement of estates of deceased persons.—Cowart v. Miner, Tex.Com. App., 29 S.W.2d 1007, dismissing error, Civ.App., 17 S.W.2d 1077.

Administration unnecessary

Courts having jurisdiction of subject matter have original jurisdiction of suits involving estates of decedents where there is no administration pending on estate and no necessity therefor, but, to acquire jurisdiction in such courts, petition must allege exception from general rule that county court has jurisdiction and proof must follow allegation; in absence of showing that there is no necessity for administration of decedent's estate, presumption obtains that administration is pending; where, however, facts show there is no necessity for administration of decedent's estate, presumption obtains that there is none pending.—Pitts v. Thompson, Tex.Civ. App., 71 S.W.2d 368, error dismissed.

Suit against surviving partner and estate of deceased partner

Where attorneys residing in Illinois performed services for an Ohio copartnership in a suit against a Wisconsin corporation, and pending the litigation one of the partners died, but the surviving partner continued the business in the same name as before, such attorneys could maintain an action to recover for their services against the surviving partner and the estate of the deceased partner in a circuit court in Wisconsin, based on garnishment of the Wisconsin corporation, and were not required to resort to the court administering the estate either of the domicile of decedent or one exercising ancillary jurisdiction.—Jones v. Citizens' Savings & Trust Co., 171 N.W. 648, 163 Wis. 646.

46. Tex.—Dunaway v. Easter, Com. App., 129 S.W.2d 286, reversing, Civ.App., 119 S.W.2d 421—Slavin v. Greever, Civ.App., 209 S.W. 479.

Special cases

Where the probate jurisdiction of county court under Const. art 5 § 16 is inadequate to adjust equities in settlement of question arising during administration of estate, resort may be had to equity powers of district court, judgment to be performed through probate court, district court's jurisdiction in such case being auxiliary and ancillary to that of probate court, and to be exercised only in special cases.—Slavin v. Greever, Tex.Civ.App., 209 S.W. 479.

Adjustment of equities between lienholders

It being necessary in a foreclosure suit to adjust the equities between different lienholders, the district court may assume jurisdiction, although the controversy involve a claim against a decedent's estate.—Willis v. Graf, Tex.Civ.App., 257 S.W. 664.

Failure to invoke jurisdiction of county court

Under Vernon's Sayles Civ.St.Annot. 1914 art 3556, the heirs of a married woman could have required her husband, as community survivor, to distribute the estate by suit in the county court of probate jurisdiction, and if such right was not exercised within twelve months from filing of the community survivor's bond, district court had jurisdiction of suit at instance of heirs for partition and distribution.—Simons v. Ware, Tex. Civ.App., 219 S.W. 858.

Limitations on review

District court has no jurisdiction to review action of probate court in approving claims against estate by independent suit brought therein for that purpose.—Jones v. Wynne, Tex. Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 141, affirmed, Com.App., 129 S.W.2d 279.

Review only on direct appeal

(1) If probate court's order appointing administrator was valid, orders approving claims were final and not subject to review in district court, except on direct appeal.—Dunaway v. Easter, Tex.Com. App., 129 S.W.2d 286, reversing, Civ. App., 119 S.W.2d 421.

(2) Where it did not appear that there were any items in claim for which decedent could not have been personally liable or that any of items were such that they could not be approved as a money demand against her estate, if probate court incorrectly approved claim as a money demand against the estate, order of approval was erroneous only, and not void, so that remedy of review by direct appeal was available and original proceeding could not be instituted in district court to determine rights of the parties.—Jones v. Wynne, Tex.Com.App., 129 S.W.2d 279, affirming, Civ.App., 104 S.W.2d 141.

47. Equitable relief

Jurisdiction of district and county court to allow claim against estate of deceased for damages for breach of contract may be concurrent, where equitable relief is essential to complete remedy.—Robinette v. Olsen, 209 N.W. 614, 114 Neb. 728, followed in In re Boyden's Estate, 209 N.W. 617, 114 Neb. 726.

48. Tex.—Equitable Building & Loan Ass'n v. Jones, Civ.App., 36 S.W.2d 252—Cantrell v. Brannon, Civ.App., 16 S.W.2d 400—Brooks v. O'Connor, Civ.App., 15 S.W.2d 182, reversed on other grounds 39 S.W.2d 14, 120 Tex. 126—McCanless v. Clough, Civ.App., 298 S.W. 643.

Partition

Power of district court to partition property does not interfere with exclusive original jurisdiction of primary and plenary jurisdiction over decedents' estates is conferred on district courts,⁴⁹ or concurrent jurisdiction over settlement of estates is conferred on the superior court and the clerk of such court.⁵⁰ Under the practice prevailing in some states the county court has original and exclusive probate jurisdiction of various matters,⁵¹ and the district court may determine such matters only on appeal from the county court.⁵²

Jurisdiction of probate courts over the administration of estates as exclusive from, or concurrent with, that of courts of equity, and the ancillary or corrective jurisdiction of courts of equity over courts of probate with respect to administration of estates, are considered in the C.J.S. title Equity § 61, also 21 C.J. p 119 note 54—p 130 note 22. The jurisdiction of the probate court as exclusive from, or concurrent with, that of courts of equity in respect of guardianship or partnership matters is treated in the C.J.S. title Guardian and Ward § 153, also 28 C.J. p. 1215 notes 73 and 74, and the C.J.S. title Partnership §§ 411, also 47 C.J. p 1205 note 42[a], respectively, and the exclusive or concurrent character of the jurisdiction of probate courts and courts of equity to decree specific performance is considered in the C.J.S. title Specific Performance § 115, also 58 C.J. p 1118 notes 54 and 55.

Effect of exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction. Where exclusive jurisdiction of specified matters resides in the court of probate, no other court may take cognizance of such matters;⁵³ but the jurisdiccounty court over estates.—McWhorter v. Gray, Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 302.

Removing cloud on title; liens

Materialmen's liens not being on property of deceased subcontractor, district court could adjudicate lien in suit to remove cloud on title.—Penniman Gravel & Material Co. v. Hutton, Tex.Civ.App., 16 S.W.2d 848, affirmed Standfill v. Penniman Gravel & Material Co., Com.App., 27 S.W.2d 135.

Allowance of attorney's fees by court of common pleas was void where such allowance was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the probate court in the case of a requisitor, who contested claim against estate with partial success.—Koelble v. Runyan, 158 N.E. 279, 25 Ohio App. 426.

Appointment of trustee

Exclusive jurisdiction of probate court to appoint trustee cannot be invaded by appointment by superior court as binding direction, and superior court has no power to advise or direct in advance action of probate court in respect to trust or interfere with due administration therein.—Rockwell v. Dow, 154 A. 229, 85 N.H. 58.

Minors' estates

District court, in proceedings for declaratory judgment, involving appointment of guardians for minors and management and control of minors' estates, is without jurisdiction, in view of original and exclusive power vested in county court over subject matter of proceedings.—Stewart v. Herten, 249 S.W. 552, 125 Neb. 210.

Settlement of executor's account

The superior court cannot exercise jurisdiction primarily reposed by statute in probate courts, and it can settle an executor's account only on an appeal from probate court, and then only so far as it can without exercising a power vested exclusively in probate court.—First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. McCoy, 198 A. 183, 124 Conn. 111.

Common-law and equity courts precluded from acting in cases where orphans' court has exclusive jurisdiction.—Manzer v. Wycoff, 78 Pa.Super. 560.

State's right of contest of will

Statutes conferring exclusive jurisdiction over the probate of wills on courts of probate do not deprive the state of the right to contest a will in the regular way after it has been admitted to probate.—State v. Keach, 65 P.2d 598, 145 Kan. 403.

tion of the probate court must be exclusive.⁵⁴ Conversely, where exclusive jurisdiction rests in another court, the court of probate may not entertain such a matter.⁵⁵ Where a matter ordinarily within the exclusive jurisdiction of a court of probate also involves other features beyond the probate court's jurisdiction, another court of competent jurisdiction may properly entertain and decide the whole case.⁵⁶ However, where a court of probate jurisdiction can afford adequate and complete relief, a court of general jurisdiction, although it may have concurrent jurisdiction as to a particular subject matter, will ordinarily refuse to exercise it.⁵⁷ An

Incidental determination of mental capacity

In purchaser's action to quiet title and for declaratory judgment, that district court was required to determine vendor's mental capacity to convey, did not oust jurisdiction of probate court, since finding on such issue would be only incidental to general jurisdiction to determine such actions, under statutes and constitution.—Whitney v. Accounting by representatives of deceased partner's widow and surviving partner

Court of common pleas sitting in equity and not orphans' court has jurisdiction over suit by deceased partner's minor child for accounting by personal representatives of deceased partner's widow and the surviving partner who with knowledge of minor's interest in deceased's estate formed and conducted new partnership without an accounting by original partnership.—Kreinson v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 185 A. 756, 323 Pa. 332.

Claims under contract with decedent, sought to be recovered in surrogate's court, should be determined in supreme court action by executor to annul contract and injunction will be granted restraining the determination of the claims in the surrogate's court.—MacLean v. Hart, 239 N.Y.S. 1, 228 App.Div. 379.

Custody of children of petitioners for divorce

Special statutory jurisdiction of superior court to regulate custody of children of petitioners for divorce is superior to probate court's jurisdiction precluding latter's interference with former's decree.—Budlong v. Budlong, 142 A. 537, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 36, 278 U.S. 642, 73 L.Ed. 556, and 50 S.Ct. 354, 281 U.S. 750, 74 L.Ed. 1161.

Custody of minor

Order of probate court, fixing amount of bond to be given as supersedeas by temporary guardian appealing from refusal of appointment as permanent guardian, and leaving custody of minor with temporary guardian pending appeal, was not an attempt to exercise jurisdiction over custody of minor, of which district court alone has jurisdiction, since right of custody accrued through execution of supersedeas bond.—Douglass v. Stover, Tex.Civ.App., 268 S.W. 1029.

Declaratory judgment

Court of common pleas and not the orphans' court has jurisdiction over proceeding, under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, to determine legal right of one of lessors under proposed lease.—Petition of Kariher, 131 A. 265, 284 Pa. 455.

Income tax claims

County court is without jurisdiction to order barred claims against decedent's estate for state income taxes because claims had not been filed within time allowed.—In re Adams' Estate, 272 N.W. 19, 234 Wis. 237, 109 A.L.R. 1364.

Specific performance

The probate court was without jurisdiction to grant specific performance of oral agreement to devise property, the district court alone having jurisdiction over action for specific performance.—In re Roberts' Estate, 277 N.W. 549, 202 Minn. 217.

56. Md.—McLaughlin v. McGee, 101 A. 682, 131 Md. 156.

District court holding property in receivership of insane person

District court, which, through receiver, had taken possession of property belonging to son and mother had jurisdiction of suit on joint indebtedness of son and mother, although probate court had appointed guardian of mother's estate on account of her insanity, and had jurisdiction to fix priorities of several liens asserted upon joint property of mother and son and to direct sale of property to enforce the judgment.—Lauraine v. Vaughn, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W. 712, error refused—Lauraine v. Masterson, Tex.Civ.App., 193 S.W. 708, error refused.

Remission to equity

A probate court which had jurisdiction over a testamentary trust did not abuse its discretion in settling final account of trustee and ordering conflicting claims to corpus of trust to be determined in quiet title action in superior court sitting as a court of equity.—In re McLennan's Estate, Cal.App., 85 P.2d 499.

exception to this rule is recognized in proceedings calling for the construction of a will,⁵⁸ but the court will not of its own motion dismiss a proceeding where the parties do not raise the question of jurisdiction and, more particularly, where most, if not all, of plaintiff's case has been heard.⁵⁹ Where a probate court and another court have concurrent jurisdiction, their orders must not conflict,⁶⁰ and the jurisdiction must be exercised in the manner customary in the tribunal possessing primary authority.⁶¹

While the granting of equitable powers to a court of probate, such as the surrogate's court does not impair the general equitable jurisdiction of another court,⁶² the latter should refuse to exercise its jurisdiction in probate matters where the former has complete power to safeguard the interests of the parties,⁶³ although where the proceeding involves matters beyond the jurisdiction of the surrogate's court, or court of probate, the court of broader jurisdiction may properly entertain the action,⁶⁴ and where the parties fail to raise the point that there is a proceeding already pending in the surrogate's court and acquiesce in proceedings in the supreme court the latter may properly exercise its general jurisdiction.⁶⁵

Transfer of cause

City's statutory right to inspect books, papers, and documents of board of directors of city trusts through mayor should be exercised by application to orphans' court, not petition to court of common pleas for writ of mandamus to compel submission of documents by board to experts appointed by mayor for inspection, examination, and audit, and supreme court will transfer to such court an action by the mayor for mandamus on appeal from order of court of common pleas discharging rule to dismiss action for want of jurisdiction, although latter court has concurrent jurisdiction with orphans' court.—Wilson v. Board of Directors of City Trusts, 188 A. 588, 324 Pa. 545.

Mode of objection

Although motion for summary judgment dismissing amended complaint in supreme court in an action to declare as a nullity a will that had been admitted to probate in surrogate's court was made apparently pursuant to rules of civil practice, and it could not be held as a matter of law that supreme court was without jurisdiction, it was proper to hear defendants on such motion in application to invoke rule that supreme court will not retain jurisdiction of a cause as to which surrogate's court has concurrent jurisdiction unless special facts require it.—Noll v. Ruprecht, 9 N.Y.S.2d 651, 256 App.Div. 926.

58. Wis.—Tharp v. Smith, 195 N.W. 331, 182 Wis. 107.

Discontinuance by surrogate

A surrogate's court will discontinue a proceeding for construction of a will which purports to leave property to the trustees under an inter vivos agreement, on petitioner's motion, to permit commencement of new proceedings for similar and other relief in the supreme court, since the construction raises issues upon which the surrogate's court has no authority to act.—In re Janowitz Will, 300 N.Y.S. 38, 164 Misc. 936.

Return to probate court

In suit involving construction of will, chancery court, after disposing of matter, should have left cause in probate court, where debts were not paid and administration not dispensed with.—Union Trust Co. v. Rossi, 22 S.W.2d 370, 180 Ark. 552.

(2) Testimony, at hearing before surrogate's court on mother's application for appointment as additional coguardian of her infant daughter's property after supreme court awarded child's custody to applicant, must be limited strictly to issues raised by petition and answer, as to whether additional guardian should be appointed to conserve property and whether mother is fit person for such appointment, and no evidence as to her moral character will be received.—In re Vanderbilt, supra.

Action to remove trustees on grounds not included in surrogate's court act, limiting power of surrogate court will be considered by supreme court.—Crummey v. Murray, 224 N.Y.S. 49, 130 Misc. 378.

Specific performance of contract to make will and incidental matters

The jurisdiction given the surrogate over the accounts of an administratrix is not exclusive, but impliedly limits the general original jurisdiction of the supreme court only when the surrogate has jurisdiction to determine all questions involved in the particular account, and, since the surrogate has no jurisdiction, either to enforce specific performance of a contract to make a will or to award damages for its breach, in view of Code Civ.Proc. § 2510, the supreme court can entertain jurisdiction of an action for that purpose, and in that action will settle the account of the administratrix of the estate.—Blaine v. Richardson, 193 N.Y.S. 612.

Judgment as irregular but binding

Where parties waived jury trial and made certain stipulations and submitted proposed findings of fact but did not raise question of jurisdiction of the supreme court, judgment of the supreme court was binding notwithstanding proceeding was informal and irregular and not to be approved and that another proceeding was pending before surrogate's court.—In re Malloy's Estate, supra.

Statutes conferring additional but not plainly exclusive jurisdiction on probate courts do not operate to deprive other courts of a theretofore existing jurisdiction over the same subject matter.⁶⁶ Concurrent jurisdiction conferred on a probate court by statute will not be extended to cover cases other than those expressly delegated to it by the legislature.⁶⁷

c. Other Particular Courts

Controlling constitutional and statutory provisions govern the exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction of various courts, such as county, district, juvenile, superior and other particular courts.

The exclusive or concurrent character of the jurisdiction of particular courts is controlled by applicable constitutional and statutory provisions construed in the light of the rules set forth supra §§ 486-488, and under such provisions exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction has been held to attach to such courts, as the court of a commissioner,⁶⁸ a court of quarter sessions,⁶⁹ a chancery court,⁷⁰ a children's court,⁷¹ a circuit court,⁷² a common pleas court,⁷³ a county court,⁷⁴ a district

Concurrent jurisdiction with supreme court

(1) The superior court as well as the supreme judicial court has original and concurrent jurisdiction of all matters of equity cognizable under the general principles of chancery jurisprudence, under Gen.L. c 214, §§ 1, 2.—Allen v. Commonwealth-Atlantic Nat. Bank of Boston, 143 N.E. 149, 248 Mass. 302.

(2) Gen.L. c 167 § 36, giving the supreme judicial court jurisdiction in equity to enforce §§ 22-35, relating to liquidation of banks, cannot be interpreted as making exclusive in the supreme judicial court a jurisdiction which but for that section would be original and concurrent both in the supreme judicial court and in the superior court, in view of Gen.L. c 214 §§ 1, 2.—Allen v. Commonwealth-Atlantic Nat. Bank of Boston, supra.

(3) Under statutes conferring on the superior court a general jurisdiction in equity, coextensive with that of the supreme judicial court, original powers are concurrently exercised by justices of these com-

Divorce and alimony

(1) Supreme court is without jurisdiction of original petition seeking modification of order for allowance in divorce action since exclusive original jurisdiction of divorce and alimony resides in the superior court.—Ex parte Asadoorian, 135 A. 322, 48 R.I. 50.

(2) Generally speaking the superior court has exclusive jurisdiction of questions respecting alimony, so that the city court may not entertain a suit based on the superior court's judgment for alimony.—Tyson v. Tyson, 167 S.E. 172, 176 Ga. 137.

(3) But the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court applies "only as respects proceedings to adjudicate the plaintiff's right to alimony and to render a judgment or decree therefor. Exclusive jurisdiction is not vested in the superior court as respects suits instituted upon a contract entered into between a husband and wife by which he agrees to pay alimony to her," and where suit is instituted in a city court on a contract approved by the judge of the superior court, a plea to the jurisdiction on the ground that the action was one for alimony and therefore within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior court is properly stricken.—Green v. Beaumont, 147 S.E. 911, 912, 39 Ga.App. 606.

Marriage contract

The ascertainment of rights and application of remedies in relation to the marriage contract are within the civil jurisdiction of the supreme court, and where that is all that is involved the family court is without jurisdiction.—People v. Pollock, 198 N.Y.S. 569.

Matrimonial actions and support

Supreme court and magistrate's courts have concurrent jurisdiction in actions to obtain support, but supreme court has exclusive jurisdiction of matrimonial actions.—People v. Meyer, 207 N.Y.S. 741, 124 Misc. 285.

(1) Generally.—Commonwealth v. Miller, 156 A. 734, 102 Pa.Super. 323—15 C.J. p 1133 note 43 [a].

(2) Determination of whether father or mother has superior right to custody of children, having regard to their best interests and welfare, is within jurisdiction of supreme court, and not children's court under applicable constitutional and statutory provisions.—Walsh v. Walsh, 263 N.Y.S. 517, 146 Misc. 604.

(3) The jurisdiction of the juvenile court over the custody of children, which is limited to boys under seventeen and girls under eighteen years, and is exercised on behalf of the state only, does not exclude the jurisdiction of the circuit court sitting in equity to determine the right to custody of the child in a controversy between individuals claiming such right, or where the child is not dependent or delinquent within the juvenile court act.—Strangway v. Allen, 240 S.W. 384, 194 Ky. 681.

Delinquency

Neb.—Ex parte Henderson, 283 N.W. 372, 135 Neb. 613.

Support

Special sessions court of New York City has exclusive jurisdiction of action to compel father to support illegitimate child, and supreme court cannot render declaratory judgment thereon.—Haan v. Haan, 231 N.Y.S. 58, 133 Misc. 197.

District and justices' courts compared

(1) The district court of city of Camden has exclusive jurisdiction over proceedings under landlord and tenant act for removal of tenant from premises located anywhere in Camden County, so that judgment of justice of the peace, dispossessing tenant of premises located in such county, but outside city of Camden, must be set aside on certiorari; and the statute extending jurisdiction of justices of the peace holding small cause courts to proceedings between landlords and tenants did not give such justices general jurisdiction in such cases so far as it conflicts with landlord and tenant act giving district courts in counties wherein leased premises are situated exclusive jurisdiction to remove tenants.—Taylor v. Small Cause Court for Camden County, 7 A.2d 872, 123 N.J.Law 40.

(2) The landlord and tenant act, giving district court of city exclusive jurisdiction over proceedings thereunder for removal of tenant from premises located anywhere in county wherein city is located, is not unconstitutional so far as it attempts to change small cause court act, giving justices of the peace holding such courts jurisdiction of proceedings between landlords and tenants.—Taylor v. Small Cause Court for Camden County, supra.

Eviction

Landlord was not required to bring summary proceeding in ejectment in justice's court to evict tenant, but could sue in ejectment in superior court, since as between landlord and tenant superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction with justice's court, and defendant in ejectment commenced in superior court, by denying plaintiff's title, controverting allegation of tenancy, and pleading betterments, conferred jurisdiction of action upon superior court.—Bryan v. Street, 183 S.E. 366, 209 N.C. 284.

§ 492. Priority and Retention of Jurisdiction

That court which first takes cognizance of an action over which it has jurisdiction and power to afford complete relief has the exclusive right to dispose of the controversy without interference from other courts of concurrent jurisdiction in which similar actions are subsequently instituted between the same parties seeking similar remedies and involving the same questions.

Where two actions between the same parties, on the same subject, and to test the same rights, are brought in different courts having concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first acquires jurisdiction, its power being adequate to the administration of complete justice, retains its jurisdiction and may dispose of the whole controversy,⁸ and no court of coördinate power is at liberty to interfere with its action.⁹ This rule rests on comity and the necessity of avoiding conflict in the execution of judgments by independent courts, and is a necessary one because any other rule would unavoidably lead to

(3) It has also been held that jurisdiction attaches in the court in which petition was first filed and not in the proceeding in which citation was first issued where the delay in issuance of process in the first action was not attributable to plaintiff.—Stewart v. Poinboeuf, 233 S.W. 1095, 111 Tex. 299—Powers v. Temple Trust Co., Tex.Com.App., 78 S.W.2d 951, affirming Temple Trust Co. v. Powers, Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 362, and followed in Roberts v. Temple Trust Co., Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 363 and Temple Trust Co. v. Sewell, Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 364.

(4) Other authority holds that the proceeding in which process was first issued is prior in time, although process was first served in another proceeding.—Robb v. Shore Bus Transp. Co., 159 A. 527, 10 N.J.Misc. 458.

(5) In determining which court first took cognizance of the cause, fractions of a day will be considered.—Davis v. Detwiller, 26 Pa.Dist. 1110.

(6) Where proceedings were brought in two courts on the same day, seeking the same relief, a party who seeks to defeat the jurisdiction of one of such courts must show that the jurisdiction of the other court was the one first invoked.—Whiting v. Shipley, 96 A. 285, 127 Md. 113.

Questions of law and fact

No substantial difference exists between questions of law and fact in determining whether court has acquired exclusive jurisdiction.—Haney v. Temple Trust Co., Tex.Civ.App., 55 S.W.2d 894.

Jurisdiction prior to motion to stay proceedings

Each court in which suit was filed had jurisdiction of controversy on service of process in each action prior to making of motion by opponent to stay proceedings in such action.

Judgment not res judicata

Court of general jurisdiction, having obtained prior jurisdiction, retained it against defense of res judicata by judgment in subsequent suit in court of limited jurisdiction.—Nash Woodland Motor Co. v. Lusk, 168 N.E. 67, 32 Ohio App. 343.

Special term of court

After giving of notice of motion for judgment returnable before one special term of court, another special term had no jurisdiction and the right to assert the jurisdiction of the first court is reserved by the presentation and filing of objections at the hearing held by the second court.—Stillman v. Stillman, 196 N.Y.S. 354, 119 Misc. 868.

However, it was held that the municipal court having concurrent jurisdiction of the subject matter properly overruled a plea in bar alleging pendency of a similar action in the superior court; but it did not appear which action was first instituted.—Johnson v. Greenen, 188 N.E. 796, 98 Ind.App. 612.

perpetual collision and be productive of most calamitous results.¹⁰

The rule has been applied to proceedings in different courts of concurrent probate jurisdiction,¹¹ and likewise to proceedings in a probate court, and a court of equity, where the probate court has assumed jurisdiction and nothing intervenes to render such jurisdiction inadequate,¹² and also generally where a probate court and some other state court have concurrent jurisdiction of a particular matter or proceeding.¹³

Basis not bar of judgment

The rule does not depend for application on whether any judgment that may be rendered in the case first instituted could be pleaded in bar in the second suit as a former adjudication, the proper test being whether or not the court in which the first suit is filed has acquired jurisdiction of the same parties and same subject matter of controversy.—Ward v. Venue

While the conflict between probate courts of different counties over exercise of jurisdiction over estate is question of venue rather than of jurisdiction, invoking jurisdiction of one court precludes subsequent exercise of jurisdiction by another probate court, unless first proceeding is discontinued.—Martin v. Martin, 247 N.W. 515, 188 Minn. 408.

Appointment of administrator

Court order in one county, appointing special administrator, is not determination of jurisdiction preventing court of another county from appointing general administrator.—

Appointment of receiver

Statute authorizing circuit court to appoint receiver is inapplicable to estates of deceased persons in custody of probate court for administration.—Seibert v. Harden, 8 S.W.2d 905, 319 Mo. 1105.

Determination of matrimonial status

Surrogate's court will determine whether appearance by deceased's first wife should be stricken out without granting her request that such court relinquish jurisdiction and permit determination in supreme court of matrimonial status in action brought there for declaratory judgment, in view of delay which would be caused in probate proceeding.—In re Browning's Estate, 276 N.Y.S. 270.

Sending issues to court of law

The sending of issues to and decision thereon by court of law is not an interference with power or jurisdiction of probate court, since this is intended only as an aid to the probate court in the exercise of its jurisdiction.—Flaks v. Flaks, 196 A. 116, 173 Md. 358.

Liability on bond

Ga.—McCord v. McPherson, 151 S.E. 53, 40 Ga.App. 614.

Which court first acquired jurisdiction

(1) The first court in which a petition is filed in a suit, the object of which is to control, affect, or direct the disposition of the property involved, acquires jurisdiction thereof, notwithstanding it appoints a receiver after another court appoints one.

U.S.—In re Couch Cotton Mills Co., D.C.Ga., 275 F. 496—Wilmer v. Atlantic & R. Air-Line R. Co., 30 F.Cas.No.17,775, 2 Woods 409.

Tex.—La Rue Holding Co. v. Essex, Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 319.

(2) So, the fact that receiver appointed by court first acquiring jurisdiction had not qualified did not authorize another court to appoint receiver of same property.—Richardson v. Beasley, Tex.Civ.App., 50 S.W. 2d 420.

(3) However, where a suit is first filed for another purpose, the court is without jurisdiction to appoint a receiver or enjoin the prosecution of suit subsequently instituted in another court, where the latter court had already appointed a receiver for the property involved.—Gage v. McCurdy, 60 S.W.2d 468, affirmed McCurdy v. Gage, Com.App., 69 S.W.2d 56, 123 Tex. 558, rehearing denied 75 S.W.2d 1107.

Other corporate property

After appointment of receiver, court of concurrent jurisdiction was unauthorized to appoint different receiver for other corporate property, constituting part of coordinated enterprise.—Strother v. McCord, 132 So. 717, 222 Ala. 450.

Compensation

Receiver appointed by court notwithstanding pending receivership action in another court having jurisdiction cannot claim compensation for services from latter court but must make application to court appointing him, even though it has transferred the res to the other court.—McRae v. Dodt, 72 P.2d 444, 50 Ariz. 336.

Vt.—Kreichman v. Webster, 2 A.2d 199, 110 Vt. 105.

(2) Probate of will in one court notwithstanding pending proceeding for issuance of letters of administration in another court is not precluded by statutory provision that where jurisdiction is once exercised in matter, "further proceedings" must be had in same court and another court cannot act in the "same matter," since probate of will is neither the "same matter" or a "further proceeding."—In re Mills' Estate, 11 N.Y.S. 2d 929, 171 Misc. 42.

(3) However, other cases have in similar circumstances held that the second court could not acquire jurisdiction.—In re Feinberg's Estate, 280 N.Y.S. 540, 155 Misc. 844.

Receivership proceedings

(1) Issue whether suit to cancel mineral lease involved same subject matter as subsequent suit in another court to adjudicate title to lease and have receiver appointed should be tested out on trial of second suit, and judgment therein is conclusive on appeal in first suit.—McCurdy v. Gage, 69 S.W.2d 56, 123 Tex. 558, affirming Gage v. McCurdy, Civ.App., 60 S.W. 2d 468, and rehearing denied McCurdy v. Gage, Com.App., 75 S.W.2d 1107.

(2) Suit held not to interfere with prior receivership proceeding.—Michigan Surety Co. v. Muskegon County, 253 N.W. 283, 266 Mich. 244.

(3) Appointment of receiver for bank and judicial determination of deficiency of assets by receivership court does not vest such court with exclusive jurisdiction to try suit to determine stockholders' liability.—Parker v. Luehrmann, 252 N.W. 402, 126 Neb. 1.

(4) Rule that creditor, and even a lienholder, must enforce his rights in court appointing receiver, does not apply where judgment charging a specific lien has been obtained.—State ex rel. Dean Automatic Telegraph Co. v. Southern, 267 S.W. 422, 218 Mo. App. 266.

(5) Under statute so providing, receiver may sue or be sued in any court of state having jurisdiction of cause, notwithstanding pending receivership proceeding, if suit does not interfere with possession or disposition of property in receiver's hands.—Prince v. Miller, 69 S.W.2d 52, 123 Tex. 118.—Joiner v. Currin, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 652.

Remitting parties to other court

Where court which acquired prior jurisdiction refused to adjudicate certain question and remitted parties to another court to litigate it, the fact that first court held case in abeyance until question was decided did not divest second court of jurisdiction to determine matter submitted to it.—Arnold v. Oliver, 237 S.W. 425, 153 Ark. 47.

Same subject matter held involved

(1) Generally.—Barrier v. Lowery, 13 S.W.2d 688, 118 Tex. 227, denying rehearing 11 S.W.2d 298, 118 Tex. 227.

(2) Where suit to cancel indemnity bonds would relieve sureties from liability thereunder, subsequent suit in another court seeking recovery on bond was precluded as involving identical question, although such later suit was also against sureties who were not included in first suit.—Duncan v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 4 S.W.2d 278.

Necessary parties

(1) "In order for the court where the suit is first filed to have prior jurisdiction over the court where it is subsequently filed, the first court must have all necessary parties before it, or it must have power to bring them before it."—V. D. Ander-

So, assumption of jurisdiction by another court is permissible notwithstanding that a prior proceeding has been instituted in the probate court where the latter court lacks jurisdiction in the matter or where its jurisdiction has terminated or is inadequate to afford the necessary relief.³¹ It has also son Co. v. Young, 101 S.W.2d 798, 800, 128 Tex. 631.

(2) So, where the proceeding prior in time is defective in that a necessary party has not been brought in, such court retains jurisdiction when the defect is cured by amendment adding the party, even though suit has also been brought in another court prior to such amendment.—In re Doyle's Estate, 139 A. 829, 291 Pa. 263.

(3) However, where the amendment adding a party in effect sets up a new cause of action, suit filed in another court prior to such amendment confers on it exclusive jurisdiction of matter involved.—National Debenture Corporation v. Adams, Tex.Civ.App., 115 S.W.2d 757.

Court without jurisdiction

An action or proceeding commenced in a court which is without jurisdiction does not offer any obstacle to the commencement of a similar action or proceeding in a court which may properly take jurisdiction thereof.—Texas Gas Utilities Co. v. City of Uvalde, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 750—15 C.J. p 1138 note 82 [b].

Divorce proceedings

(1) After denial of alimony pendente lite because of agreement waiving right thereto, another judge of same district had jurisdiction of action to cancel agreement.—Metcalfe v. District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for Washoe County, 274 P. 5, 51 Nev. 253.

(2) Court granting divorce had exclusive jurisdiction to make orders respecting custody of children, notwithstanding decree of court of another county in prior action denying divorce, but providing for custody of children.—Jones v. Jones, 58 P.2d 330, 177 Okl. 181.

Receivership proceedings

(1) Only when a court acquires jurisdiction of a cause and thus appoints a receiver may another court of coordinate jurisdiction not interfere or divest the receiver of such cause.—Joiner v. Currin, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 652.

(2) So, where statute provides that in certain cases one court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, such court acquires and retains jurisdiction notwithstanding prior appointment of receiver by another court.—Walker v. McMillen, 61 S.W.2d 455, 187 Ark. 536.

(3) Fact that mortgaged premises are already in constructive possession of receiver appointed in proceedings for liquidation of insolvent bank does not preclude appointment of receiver of rents and profits in mortgage foreclosure action, since court in former action had no power to grant mortgagee complete relief.—Prudential Ins. Co. of America of Newark, N. J. v. Farm Inv. Co., 243 N.W. 812, 123 Neb. 578, vacating Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Farm Inv. Co., 240 N.W. 766, 122 Neb. 561, and overruling Wells v. Farmers' State Bank of Overton, 237 N.W. 402, 121 Neb. 462, followed in Wells v. Farmers' State Bank of Overton, 237 N.W. 403, 121 Neb. 466.

Proceedings for guardianship or administration of incompetent's estate

(1) Text rule generally applies.—Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Jones, Tex.Civ.App., 103 S.W.2d 1043, error refused.—Inman v. Texas Land & Mortgage Co., Tex.Civ.App., 78 S.W.2d 1032.

(2) Where a county court judicially determines jurisdictional facts necessary to authorize it to appoint a guardian of the person and estate of a minor, jurisdiction acquired is exclusive, notwithstanding the prior commencement of proceedings for appointment of a guardian in another county court.—Micco v. Huser, 91 P. 2d 1069, 185 Okl. 394—Jackson v. Haney, 25 P.2d 771, 166 Okl. 13.

Creditor's suit

(1) The institution of a creditor's suit does not give the court in which such suit is instituted exclusive jurisdiction of the entire matter so as to preclude suits by other creditors in another court; but if the court in which one such suit is pending orders a reference convening the creditors, all proceedings in the other suits must be stayed.—Craig v. Hoge, 28 S.E. 317, 95 Va. 275—15 C.J. p 1139 notes 83, 85.

(2) Nor is the court which first assumes jurisdiction, and under whose mesne or final process the first actual seizure of the land is made, entitled to exclusive control thereof until sale and distribution of the proceeds, but another court may assume jurisdiction of proceedings for sale under another claim.—Miller v. Lash, 4 Pa.Super. 292.

(3) A bill in the nature of a creditors' bill to reach the interests of the heirs of decedent for the payment of sums disbursed and expenses incurred by complainant on behalf of the heirs in connection with litigation over the estate is not objectionable, as seeking to overthrow the orders of distribution made by a court having jurisdiction of the estate, where complainant must look to the orders as the basis on which his bill must be maintained, and equity has jurisdiction of the controversy.—Coram v. Davis, 95 N.E. 238, 209 Mass. 219.

Absence of conflict of jurisdiction

While under statute, a court having acquired jurisdiction may be subsequently divested thereof when another court has exercised its superior jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the inferior court may continue where no conflict arises.

No pending proceeding Where petition for appointment of administrator pendente lite was nullity because will had not been lodged for probate, there was no proceeding pending which would preclude another court of probate jurisdiction from receiving the will for probate.—Morrissey's Will, 107 A. 70, 91 N. J.Eq. 289.

Particular matters

(1) Since in probate proceeding to establish papers as will, construction of will is not question before court, circuit court has jurisdiction of later suit involving construction of will.—Adams v. Cowan, 168 S.E. 750, 160 Va. 1.

(2) Settlement of administration in chancery court did not prevent probate court on discovery of unadministered assets from appointing an administrator de bonis non.—Peters Mineral Land Co. v. Hooper, 94 So. 606, 208 Ala. 324.

(3) Pending probate proceeding for appointment of general or special administrator does not preclude application in court of another county where property is situated to appoint special administrator to preserve such property until general administrator is appointed.—Miller v. Superior Court of Yolo County, 199 P. 805, 186 Cal. 453.

(4) However, the special administrator appointed in court first acquiring jurisdiction may be made to account to the court subsequently appointing special general administrator.—Phillips v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 216 P. 32, 191 Cal. 265.

(5) General principle that court first taking jurisdiction will retain it is inapplicable to proceeding to restrain applications for unnecessary administration pending in another county.—Chase v. Bartlett, 166 S.E. 832, 176 Ga. 40.

Court of equity may take jurisdiction

(2) To appoint a trustee to administer certain provisions of the will of deceased, without infringing on the authority of the administrator appointed by the probate court.—Sharp v. State, 109 A. 454, 135 Md. 551.

(3) Fact of existence of will and qualification of executor named therein is not sufficient to show pending probate proceeding for settlement of accounts, excluding assumption of jurisdiction of a court of equity for such settlement.—Robinson v. Georgia Sav. Bank & Trust Co., 196 S.E. 395, 185 Ga. 688—Terry v. Chandler, 158 S.E. 572, 172 Ga. 715—Calbeck v. Herrington, 152 S.E. 53, 169 Ga. 869—Clements v. Fletcher, 114 S.E. 637, 154 Ga. 386.

Return of case to probate court

While a court may assume jurisdiction to settle matters over which the probate court lacks jurisdiction, it must afterward return the case to the probate court for adjudication of other matters within the latter court's jurisdiction.—Murphey v. Murphey, Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 158.

where both actions are in the same court which has general jurisdiction of the entire litigation.³³

*The mere fact that another court might have jurisdiction does not, where such jurisdiction has not been invoked, warrant a court having concurrent jurisdiction in a refusal to entertain an action or proceeding.*³⁴

§ 493. Assumption and Exercise of Conflict-jurisdiction in General

Courts seek to avoid conflicts in matters of concurrent jurisdiction; and a litigant may not pursue the same remedy in two courts at the same time.

The policy of courts in matters of concurrent jurisdiction is to avoid a conflict of jurisdiction.³⁵ So, while courts have been said to be liberal in permitting a party commencing an action to select his forum,³⁶ a litigant may not seek the same remedy on the same state of facts in two different courts at the same time and pursue such remedy in both courts concurrently to a conclusion.³⁷

Rulings on evidence. A court has no power to make rulings on evidence to be offered at a trial to be held in a court of coördinate jurisdiction.³⁸

§ 494. Prisoners under Arrest, Commitment, or Sentence

Questions as to the retention of jurisdiction of a person accused of crime by the court first acquiring jurisdiction as well as of the interference by one court with the commitment or sentence of another are discussed in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 111, also 16 C.J. p 148 notes 25-32, and 15 C.J. p 1139 note 93—p 1140 note 97. The liability to arrest on a criminal charge of one in custody on another criminal charge is considered in Arrest § 3 notes 61, 62; the liability to arrest on a civil charge of one convicted of crime in Arrest § 28 b; and of one under arrest in another action in Arrest § 28 a.

§ 495. Property in Custodia Legis

A court cannot interfere with property of which another court of concurrent jurisdiction has possession, whether actual or constructive; but jurisdiction of controversies concerning such property may be exercised so far as can be done without disturbing the latter court's possession.

A court which has in its possession, control, or equivalent dominion, property or funds involved in litigation may exercise exclusive jurisdiction over such property or funds to determine the rights therein, such as questions respecting the title, possession, control, management, and disposition thereof; and another court of concurrent or coördinate jurisdiction cannot interfere with such possession or control.³⁹ Accordingly one court should ordi-

"The reason of the rule, as stated by the courts, is that, when a court acquires jurisdiction of goods, chattels, or money in one case, the orderly process of the court requires that it shall be permitted to determine the rights of the parties in that case, without the interference or interruption of a conflicting jurisdiction or of a separate and distinct action or proceeding."—Outerbridge Horsey Co. v. Martin, 120 A. 235, 236, 142 Md. 52.

Decedent's property; specific performance

(1) Where a proceeding specifically to enforce a contract made with a decedent was begun in the probate court and transferred to the circuit court, the probate court thereafter had no right to order the administrator of the estate to take possession of and rent the real estate involved in such suit.—State ex rel.

(2) Probate court held to have no jurisdiction to order sale of decedent's property during pendency of appeal from judgment of circuit court in suit for specific performance of deceased's contract to transfer one-half of his property to plaintiff.—In re Janisch's Estate, Mo.App., 117 S.W.2d 358.

Disposition of bank deposit pending divorce action

Where a court in which a divorce action was pending restrained the disposition of a bank deposit held in the names of the husband and wife, a court of concurrent jurisdiction could not impound the fund in a garnishment proceeding.—Holm v. Pratt, 176 P. 266, 52 Utah 593.

Bank in liquidation

The property of an insolvent bank in process of liquidation by the banking commissioner is in custodia legis, and the court of the county where the bank is located has exclusive jurisdiction and custody of the subject matter of the liquidation.—Ogden v. Edwards, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 675.

Wis.—Alexander v. Wald, 286 N.W. 6, 15 C.J. p 1140 note 1.

Property in custody of receiver as in custody of court see the C.J.S. title Receivers § 104, also 53 C.J. p 95 note 72—p 96 note 77.

"The court first exercising jurisdiction by appointing a receiver has the untrammelled right to control and administer the property or fund derived from it to the end, and, if creditors or others claim liens or preferences, they should apply to the court appointing the receiver for the protection of their rights."—Fleeger v. Swift, 251 P. 187, 188, 122 Kan. 6.

Jurisdiction prior to actual appointment

Filing of bill for receiver, judge's sanction of it, and service in accordance with his order, gave court exclusive jurisdiction of property involved, even though it did not appoint a receiver until a later date; hence, where a receiver appointed by a second court took possession after the first court so acquired jurisdiction, he must account to the receiver subsequently appointed by the first court.—La Rue Holding Co. v. Essex, Tex.Civ.App., 45 S.W.2d 319.

Coördinate branch of same court

Where a court has appointed receivers to administer funds of an insolvent corporation, a coördinate branch of the same court cannot place such funds in possession of other receivers in another proceeding.—People v. Murray Hill Bank, 41 N.Y.S. 804, 10 App.Div. 328, 26 N.Y. Civ.Proc. 1.

Property sold subject to liens

A court whose receiver sold property subject to certain liens was held to have retained jurisdiction over the property and power to sell it to enforce the liens, notwithstanding another court appointed an operating receiver for the company to which the property had been sold.—State ex rel. Elder v. Circuit Court of Madison County, 5 N.E.2d 641, 212 Ind. 1, dissenting opinion 3 N.E.2d 86, 212 Ind. 1.

Receiver for insolvent trustee

Where receiver was appointed by one court to take charge of insolvent trust company which had been appointed coexecutor and cotrustee by another court, the latter court could not compel the receiver to account for the trust assets.—Bates v. Evans, Iowa, 284 N.W. 385.

Statute authorizing suits against receivers

(1) Under a statute permitting suits against receivers in courts other than that in which the receivership is pending, a suit to establish a debt and foreclose a lien on property held by the receiver may be brought and prosecuted to judgment in such other courts.—Lynch Davidson & Co. v. Hinnant, Tex.Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 532—National Equitable Soc. v. Alexander, Tex.Civ.App., 220 S.W. 184.

(2) Such a statute, although authorizing suits against receivers without first obtaining leave of the court which appointed them, does not confer on one court the right to interfere with the custody, control, management, or possession of property in the hands of the receiver of another court.—McCurdy v. Gage, 69 S.W.2d 56, 123 Tex. 558, affirming Gage v. McCurdy, Civ.App., 60 S.W. 2d 468, and rehearing denied McCurdy v. Gage, Com.App., 75 S.W.2d 1107—Prince v. Miller, 69 S.W.2d 52, 123 Tex. 118—Eaton v. Whisenant, Tex.Civ.App., 50 S.W.2d 1109—Mudge v. Hughes, Tex.Civ.App., 212 S.W. 819.

(3) Hence, under such statute, while one court may decree foreclosure against property held by the receiver of another court, it cannot order a sale of the property.—Ogden v. Edwards, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W. 2d 675—Lynch Davidson & Co. v. Hinnant, Tex.Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 532.

While it has been said that one court has no right to interfere with the possession of property in the custody and control of another court unless it has direct supervisory control over such other court or some superior jurisdiction in the premises,⁴⁵ other cases have held that the rule in favor of the jurisdiction of the court first acquiring jurisdiction of specific property has no reference to the supremacy of one tribunal over the other or the superiority in rank of the respective claims on behalf of which the conflicting jurisdictions are invoked.⁴⁶

A court is not deprived of jurisdiction over controversies concerning property in the custody of another court in so far as it can exercise such jurisdiction without disturbing the possession of such other court;⁴⁷ and, of course, a court does not disturb another court's possession where the property is not in fact in custodia legis.⁴⁸ Further, where one not a party to a proceeding has a superior right in property, which right cannot be adjudicated by the court having jurisdiction and custody of the property, he may seek relief in another court which has the necessary jurisdiction and power.⁴⁹

(4) The adjudication of an attorney's claim and right to a lien on property in the hands of the receiver was held not an interference with the receiver's possession; nor was such interference shown by the fact that the action against the receiver might tend to hamper his disposal of lots, or that such suit and attempt to foreclose plaintiff's lien may have induced action against the receiver by third parties.—Kirby v. Dilworth & Marshall, Tex.Com.App., 260 S.W. 152, modifying Dilworth & Marshall v. Kirby, Civ.App., 253 S.W. 860.

Incidental receivership after change of venue

Restraining use of decedent's property under foreclosure

Where a decedent's estate was being administered in the probate court, one foreclosing a mortgage on live stock belonging to the estate could not in such suit secure an injunction restraining the use of the animals, since the probate court had exclusive jurisdiction of the estate property.—*Dunovant v. Trustee appointed by parties

In an action for an accounting and to wind up a partnership business, the property was held not to be in custodia legis where the parties themselves appointed a trustee to take charge of the business and assets.—Ogden v. Syphrett, Tex.Civ. App., 236 S.W. 143, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Appearance without admission of liability

Where insurance company did not admit liability, its voluntary appearance in garnishment proceeding could not transfer alleged intangible rights of insured on policy to custody of court.—*Fidelity Phenix Fire Ins. The court from which process originally issues, or the judge thereof, has control of such process for every purpose;⁵⁵ and one court of record may not entertain an application merely to set aside or quash the process or writ of another court of record.⁵⁶ Where mesne or final process is issued by a court of general jurisdiction, a court of another jurisdiction will not review or decide on the regularity of such process.⁵⁷

- (4) Satisfaction

(1) In General

A court may determine the ownership of a judgment not rendered by it, but cannot, without statutory authority, review, or grant a supersedeas to, another court's decree.

Apart from the review by superior tribunals of the acts of inferior tribunals as considered passim in Appeal and Error and also in §§ 311-485 supra, one court generally has no power to review the decree of another court,⁵⁸ in the absence of statutory authority,⁵⁹ or to grant a supersedeas thereto;⁶⁰ but the ownership of a judgment may be determined by a court other than the one which rendered the decision.⁶¹

It has been held that, where a court has several divisions, it is not error to assign the hearing of a writ of scire facias to revive a judgment to a division other than the one by which the judgment was rendered.⁶²

(2) Enforcement

To enforce a judgment, resort should generally be to the court which rendered it, although in some cases another court may assume jurisdiction for the purpose.

Resort should generally be had to the court in which a decree or judgment was obtained for the enforcement thereof,⁶³ although in some cases another court has been permitted to assume jurisdiction for this purpose,⁶⁴ as where a court is without power to enforce a particular part of its judgment.⁶⁵

(3) Execution

Courts have been held without jurisdiction to compel the enforcement of, or to supersede or quash, the executions of other courts.

A judge of one court has been held to have no jurisdiction, in the absence of statute, to compel a sheriff to enforce an execution issued by another court,⁶⁶ and a superior court judge to have no jurisdiction to issue mandamus directing the ministerial officer of a judge of another court to execute an order not emanating from such superior court judge.⁶⁷

Supersedeas. Under a statute conferring jurisdiction on judges of the county courts concurrent with that of the circuit courts to issue writs of certiorari and supersedeas, a county court judge is not authorized to supersede an execution issued by a justice of the peace unless such action is ancillary to a certiorari to remove the cause from the justice for a trial de novo.⁶⁸

Divesting court's jurisdiction by own order

A chancery court was held without power to divest itself of jurisdiction to enforce its own decrees by ordering the transfer of funds from its own jurisdiction to that of a circuit court.—Parker v. Baker, 114 S.W.2d 23, 195 Ark. 761.

Action at law to enforce decree in equity

Where a court of equity has rendered a decree that a sum of money be paid, an action at law within the same jurisdiction to recover such sum will not lie.—Boyle v. Schindel, 52 Md. 1.

Rights to be exercised under the order and direction of the court making an interlocutory and administrative decree cannot be asserted by an independent suit in another court.—Cheever v. Rutland & B. R. Co., 39 Vt. 653.

(2) Such procedure was held to have been followed where application for sale of land to satisfy trust deed was filed in an injunction proceeding incident to the receivership and not in the receivership proceeding.—Scarborough v. Connell, Tex.Civ.App., 84 S.W.2d 734.

Determination of shares in recovery for wrongful death

Question of who was entitled to share in recovery for wrongful death must be determined in probate proceedings, not in death action.—Reidy v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 249 N. W. 347, 216 Iowa 415.

Certification of judgment to probate court

(1) Where recovery for wrongful death is for estate, and continued probate proceedings are necessary, judgment should be certified to probate court.—Adams v. Shell, 33 S.W. 3d 1107, 182 Ark. 959.

(2) Where district court has intervened for purpose of settling matters which could not be adjusted in the probate court, the judgment of the district court in so far as it relates to matters pertaining purely to the administration of the estate should be certified to the probate court for observance.—Murphey v. Murphey, Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 158.

(4) Satisfaction

A court ordinarily has exclusive power over the satisfaction of its own judgments.

Every court ordinarily has power to control the satisfaction of its own judgments, and no other court has any power in respect thereof.⁷¹

c. Records

One court cannot take an original paper from another. Where a record of one court is certified to another, the latter can consider the record only as certified.

No power exists in a court to draw or to take an original paper from another court.⁷² It has been held that, where a judicial record of a court is certified to a court of another county, the latter court can consider the record only as certified.⁷³

§ 497. Suspension of Proceedings

Generally, a court may not by order stay proceedings in an action pending in another court; the remedy is by action for injunction.

Generally, one court may not by an order in one action stay proceedings in an action pending in another court.⁷⁴ The stay should be sought in the court where the action to be stayed is pending,⁷⁵ or in an independent equity action wherein such relief is demanded in the complaint,⁷⁶ as by seeking injunction.⁷⁷

Under governing constitutional provisions, the supreme court of Wisconsin, when it has taken original jurisdiction of a case, may restrain or suspend interfering or conflicting action by any inferior court.⁷⁸

§ 498. Enjoining Proceedings in Another Court

One court may, in some cases and subject to well recognized limitations, restrain a party from proceeding further in another court. To impose restraint directly on a court or judge thereof, a writ of prohibition from a higher court is necessary.

In some cases one court may restrain parties from proceeding further in another court in the same state,⁷⁹ as where the former, but not the

As between courts of different districts

In view of rules of civil practice, providing that a motion cannot be made in the first district in an action triable elsewhere, a supreme court in the first district will not, even if it has the power, grant a motion in an action, pending before it to stay proceedings in a prior action in another district, and the court first acquiring jurisdiction

When so provided by statute, actions for injunctions to stay proceedings at law may be brought only in the county in which the proceedings at law are had⁸⁷ or an action to enjoin proceedings in a civil action may be brought only in the county and the court in which such action is pending.⁸⁸ So also a statute providing that a writ of injunction granted to stay proceedings in a suit shall be returnable to, and be tried in, the court where the suit is pending will, when applicable, be accorded effect;⁸⁹ but it is applicable only where the second suit is purely for injunctive relief and not where injunctive relief is simply ancillary to the main purpose of the suit.⁹⁰

An injunction to prevent the prosecution of further proceedings in another court may be granted, if at all, only against the parties; it may not be granted against the court itself⁹¹ or a judge thereof.⁹² However, the fact that an injunctive order runs against a party and not against the court is not alone sufficient to justify it;⁹³ it may otherwise be unauthorized or improper as shown above in this section.

An order restraining the sheriff from enforcing a certain law against named persons does not prevent the granting of an injunction by another court, under statutory authority, on application of the county attorney, restraining such persons from violating such law, neither the parties nor the subject matter affected by the two orders being the same.⁹⁴

Prohibition. A writ of prohibition is an appropriate remedy to obtain a determination by the highest court of the state as to which one of two lower coordinate courts asserting exclusive jurisdiction of a suit has the right to proceed.⁹⁵ By such a writ a higher court may prevent an inferior court from seizing property which another inferior court has previously seized, actually or constructively, and over which it still maintains jurisdiction.⁹⁶ However, one district court cannot issue a writ of prohibition against another district court of equal rank.⁹⁷

§ 499. — Enforcement of Judgment

It is a rule, subject to several exceptions, that one court cannot enjoin enforcement of a judgment rendered by another court.

It is a general rule, affirmed by statute in some states, that the enforcement of a judgment can be enjoined only by the court which rendered the judgment and not by another court⁹⁸ unless the court vested with exclusive jurisdiction to appoint and remove guardians cannot be enjoined by another court from performing his duties under the order of appointment.⁸

§ 500. — Enforcement of Execution

Ordinarily one court may not enjoin the issuance, levy, or enforcement of, or sale under, an execution issued on the judgment of another court; but it may do so where the judgment is void or satisfied; and it may enjoin the levy on, or sale of, property not subject thereto.

Under the rule, stated supra § 496, that one court cannot control the process of another court, as well as under governing statutes,⁹ it is usually held that one court cannot enjoin the issuance of an execution from another court,¹⁰ or the levy and enforcement of an execution issued on the judgment of another tribunal,¹¹ or a sale thereunder,¹² even though an execution of a court of one county is placed in the hands of the sheriff or coroner of another county.¹³ In some cases, however, the right of one court to enjoin the enforcement of an execution from another court is asserted,¹⁴ as where the execution is on a satisfied¹⁵ or void¹⁶ judgment, or where the court from which the execution issued has no general equity powers or jurisdiction of injunction suits.¹⁷ Also a court may

Order void or not judgment

Enforcement of an order may be enjoined over objection that the court granting the injunction did not render the judgment enjoined, where the order is not a judgment, the judge or commissioner who made it having acted merely in a ministerial capacity and not in the exercise of a judicial function and it not being entered, or required by law to be entered, on the records of any court as a judgment, or, if it can be called a judgment, it is void.—E. H. Taylor, Jr., & Sons v. Thornton, 199 S.W. 40, 178 Ky. 463.

9. Limits of authority under statute

(1) Under a statute providing that writs of injunction granted to stay execution on a judgment shall be returnable to, and tried in, the court where the judgment was rendered, the utmost another court can do is to grant a temporary writ of injunction returnable to the court which rendered judgment; it cannot hear and determine the issues involved.—First Nat. Gonzales, Tex.Civ.App., 246 S.W. 726.

(2) After the perfection of an appeal in the original suit, another district court is wholly without authority to enter any order restraining proceedings under an execution or order of sale based on the judgment, even a temporary injunction returnable to the court which rendered the judgment.—*State v. Decisions under unconstitutional statute

(1) It was said that, as a matter of mere construction, and irrespective of validity, the provision of a moratorium act authorizing the judge of the court of the county in which the land involved or a part thereof is situated to restrain temporarily a sale thereof under execution or order of sale necessarily supersedes a statute requiring that writs of injunction granted to stay proceedings in suit or execution on judgment shall be returned to court where such suit is pending or judgment was rendered.—Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank of Dallas v. Ballard, Civ.App., 74 S.W.2d 297, affirmed Ballard v. Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank of Dallas, 76 S.W.2d 1042, 124 Tex. 113.

(2) However, this provision of the act was considered unconstitutional and void as against public policy.—Glenn v. Hollums, Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 1068—Dallas Joint Stock Land Bank v. Ray, Tex.Civ.App., 71 S.W.2d 589.

(3) Also, as recited in Constitutional Law § 393 b, the act was held void as impairing the obligations of contracts.

enjoin illegal acts under the final process of another court,¹⁸ particularly the levy on, or sale of, property not subject thereto,¹⁹ such as the property of a person other than the judgment debtor,²⁰ property in the possession of a court through a receiver,²¹ or property which is exempt or is claimed as a homestead.²²

Where a judgment, although rendered in one county, becomes a judgment in another county by the filing of a transcript therein under statutory authority and the clerk of the court of the latter county issues an execution thereon, the court of the latter county has jurisdiction of an action to restrain and prevent a sale of property under the execution.²³ In the case of two courts having precisely the same jurisdiction, such as two county courts at law in the same county, one may enjoin

the levy of a writ of execution issued on a judgment rendered by the other.²⁴

§ 501. Vacating, Modifying, or Annulling Decisions

Generally speaking, one court may not, otherwise than on appeal or other proceeding for review, modify or set aside a judgment or decree of another court; and likewise one judge should not vacate or modify an order of another judge of coördinate jurisdiction who is still available. The authorities are not in harmony as to what, if any, exceptions to the rule should be recognized.

As a general rule, a judgment or decree rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction and not void on its face may be modified, annulled, vacated, or set aside only by the court which rendered it or a court exercising appellate jurisdiction²⁵ and not by any other court,²⁶ especially a court of inferior,²⁷ equal, like, concurrent, or coördinate²⁸

34. Wash.—Du Pont Cellophane Co. v. Kinney, 42 P.2d 441, 181 Wash. 140.

35. Former approval by judge

(1) Proceeding to surcharge and falsify county tax collector's reports and accounts, approved by circuit judge, is not beyond chancery court's jurisdiction as attempt to review decision of court of equal, coordinate jurisdiction, the approval being a ministerial, and not a judicial, act.—Yates v. State, 54 S.W.2d 981, 186 Ark. 749.

(2) Also an order by clerk of court allowing attorneys' fees was appealable to superior court, although approved by resident judge, since resident judge had no authority or duty to approve order, and order remained essentially one of the clerk.—Collins v. Wooten, 193 S.E. 385, 212 N.C. 359.

Former procedural order

There is no merit in an objection that a judgment awarding rents to the real owner of the property nullifies an order authorizing a levy on the rents in the hands of an agent of the judgment debtor, the order, to which plaintiff in the subsequent action was not a party and by which he was not bound, being predicated on the assumed ownership of the judgment debtor and amounting to no more than formal procedure to

Judicial sale. It is usually held that, where a sale has been made under the order of and confirmed by a court of competent jurisdiction, a proceeding for the annulment of such sale should be brought before the court issuing the order;³⁶ but there is also authority for the view that an action to annul such sale may be brought in another court.³⁷

Change of venue. Where a suit to vacate a decree was instituted in the district court for the county in which such decree was originally granted, but the venue was afterward changed to the district court of another county, a decree of vacation made by the latter court is valid.³⁸

Fraud. According to a number of decisions, a judgment procured in one court by fraud may be annulled, vacated, or set aside by another court exercising equitable jurisdiction;³⁹ but other decisions take a contrary view.⁴⁰

Want of jurisdiction. It has been held that an order made by a judge or court without authority may be reviewed by a court of coordinate jurisdiction, and should be vacated by it on notice.⁴¹ Indeed, it has been held that any court has a right to declare the decree of any other court null and void for want of jurisdiction;⁴² but it has also been held that an orphans' court, which is of limited jurisdiction, is, in the absence of a statute conferring it, without power or jurisdiction to set aside a decree of a court of common pleas on the ground that the latter court was without jurisdiction.⁴³

Branch, division, or department of court. In some states, where a court has several branches or departments, one branch or department may, by order, vacate or set aside an order previously made by another branch or department;⁴⁴ but in another make effective a levy on rights and credits, and the subsequent action being essentially one by the real owner to hold the sheriff and execution creditor of another for a wrongful levy.—Gaudiosi v. Micone, 141 A. 575, 6 N.J.Misc. 425.

Former decree in habeas corpus proceedings for custody of minor

(1) While a decree of a court of equity, in habeas corpus proceedings, awarding the custody of a minor to one person is, while it remains in force and effect, a barrier to a final order by a probate court for adoption of the minor by another person, it does not prevent the entry of an interlocutory order for adoption to be made final if and when it can be done conformably to the decree of the court of equity.—Wright v. Price, 147 So. 675, 226 Ala. 468.

(2) It is said that the right to modify or set aside judgment on habeas corpus, determining rights of parties litigant to custody of minor child, is not confined to court where it was rendered; but apparently what is meant is that, where conditions have materially changed since the judgment, another proceeding, constituting in effect a new suit, may be brought in another court to determine the right to custody at the time it is instituted.—Hardy v. McCulloch, Tex.Civ.App., 236 S.W. 629.

Matters not involved or only incidentally involved

(1) Suit to set aside void or voidable judgment affirmed by court of civil appeals does not encroach upon jurisdiction of such court where issue as to validity of such judgment was not involved, or adjudicated in such affirmance.—Nash v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co., Tex.Civ. App., 79 S.W.2d 182.

(2) If the question of the nullity of a judgment is only incidentally involved in an action, it has been held that such action may be brought before any court of competent jurisdiction.—Bledsoe v. Erwin, 33 La. Ann. 615.

(3) Adjudication by one district court that a judgment of another district court had been satisfied before an execution sale was made under it and that the sale could not divest owner of title or invest title in purported purchaser, was not void for want of jurisdiction over subject matter, not being an impeachment of the integrity of such judgment of the other court, nor such an attack upon it as could only be presented in the court that rendered it.—Williams v. Croom, Tex.Civ.App., 215 S.W. 156.

(4) However, where sole relief sought in action is that judgment of the county court be satisfied and discharged and declared no longer to be a lien, in view of control of its judgments by the county court, a court of concurrent jurisdiction will not take jurisdiction.—Libby v. Central Wisconsin Trust Co., 197 N.W. 206, 182 Wis. 599.

state one division of a court cannot disturb a judgment rendered by another division.⁴⁵

Trial and special terms. In New York, the court at a special term is bound by, and may not review, reverse, modify, or amend, an order made at another special term⁴⁶ or at a trial term;⁴⁷ and a denial of a motion at a special term is binding on the court at a trial term.⁴⁸

Judges. Notwithstanding a few decisions to the contrary as to rulings on demurrers,⁴⁹ it is generally considered that, in the same case, one judge may not review and overrule the prior decisions, or vacate or modify the prior orders, of another judge of the same court or possessing equal and coordinate power and jurisdiction, where the other judge is available at the time of the application to set aside or change his order or decision.⁵⁰ Furthermore, where this rule is applicable, it is not permissible to violate it by making an order which conflicts, or is inconsistent, with a prior order by another judge.⁵¹ Of course, particular orders not in

Necessity of consideration of subsequent motion by original judge

(1) Where, in a landlord's summary proceeding, it was agreed that all questions except that of reasonable rental should be eliminated, and the trial judge heard evidence on that question and handed down an opinion, a motion before another justice to dismiss the complaint should have been referred to the justice before whom the proceedings were then pending.—*Levy v. terms vacating or modifying prior orders of another judge may be construed not to be in conflict or necessarily inconsistent therewith;⁵² a party may, by arguing the motion for the second order, waive the point that the prior order of another judge is conclusive;⁵³ a statement in an order appointing a receiver that it is entered without prejudice to the making of a motion before another judge to terminate the receivership supports the view that, in granting the motion to terminate, there is no attempt to review the order of a court of concurrent jurisdiction;⁵⁴ and after reversal of the judgment, an earlier decision by the trial judge as to costs is not binding on another judge.⁵⁵

Under the terms and construction of an applicable statute, a judge may, in a particular action or proceeding, have power to vacate an order granted by another judge⁵⁶ or the judge who granted the order may be without authority to vacate it, as where he is a nonresident judge and acted only because of the absence and inaccessibility of the resident judge.⁵⁷

2. TRANSFER OF CAUSES

§ 502. In General

- a. Power to transfer generally
- b. When transfer proper

a. Power to Transfer Generally

The legislature generally has power to provide for the transfer of causes from one court to another; but a court has no power to transfer a cause in the absence of statutory authority.

As a general rule, it is within the constitutional powers conferred upon the legislature of a state to provide by statute for the removal of causes from one court to another,⁵⁸ as distinguished from the removal of causes from state courts to federal courts under acts of congress, discussed in the title Removal of Causes, and a change of the place of trial from one county or district to another, treated in the title Venue. However, unless expressly authorized so to do, a court has no authority to transfer a cause from itself to another court, and thereby give the other court possession of the case to hear and determine it,⁵⁹ although the other court would have had jurisdiction of the cause if it had come to it by due process.⁶⁰ While a statute is invalid in so far as it undertakes to vest a court with power, to be exercised compulsorily and against the will of the parties, to transfer to another court actions of which the original court had jurisdiction when the constitution was adopted,⁶¹ the statute may be given effect, so far as to authorize a transfer with the consent of the parties.⁶²

Construction of statutes. Statutes authorizing the transfer of causes from courts of limited jurisdiction when necessary must be construed within reasonable and fair limitations.⁶³

Prospective or retrospective operation. A general statute relating to the transfer of causes between superior and district courts is applicable to a superior court which came within the purview of the statute after its enactment although not originally within the purview thereof.⁶⁴ A statute authorizing the transfer of causes from one court to another relates to procedure only, and applies

A legislative act validating all proceedings in district courts in causes transferred thereto validates the transfer of a cause from the superior court to a district court and subsequent proceedings therein, if the proceedings sought to be validated could lawfully have been authorized in the first instance.⁶⁶

b. When Transfer Proper

The questions from or to what court a cause may be transferred, what causes may be transferred, and what constitutes a sufficient ground for a transfer, involve a construction of the constitutional or statutory provisions relating to the subject.

Since the power to transfer a cause from one court to another is dependent on constitutional or statutory provisions, as stated supra § 502 a, the particular constitutional or statutory provision in force in a state at the time when a transfer is sought must, of course, be looked to in order to determine from or to what court a cause may be transferred,⁶⁷ what causes are subject to be so transferred,⁶⁸ and what constitutes a sufficient

Repeal of statute

L.1909 c 14 art 7 § 10, as amended by L.1911 c 121 § 1, providing for transfer of causes from superior to district court, was not repealed by L.1911 c 39 § 2, adopting Revised Code of Laws; hence omission of revisors to include provision for transferring causes from superior to district courts is without effect.—In re Nichols' Will, 166 P. 1087, 54 Okl. 241.

Power under particular statutes

(1) Under Civ.Pract.Act § 1283 et seq. § 1296, every proceeding to review weight, competency, and sufficiency of evidence taken by board or officer pursuant to "statutory direction" must be transferred in first instance to appellate division regardless of whether additional questions are raised, and every other proceeding must be determined by the special term, which shall itself dispose of the cause on the merits.—Rochester Gas & Electric Corporation v. Maitble, 15 N.Y.S.2d 163, 172 Misc. 359.

(2) Civ.Pract.Act §§ 96, 97, 1572, do not confer jurisdiction to remove an action pending in one court of record to another court of record, not the supreme court.—T. Blumenthal & Co. v. Theo. Tiedemann & Sons, 194 N.Y.S. 86, 118 Misc. 560.

(3) Under New York City Municipal Court Code § 17 subd 5, a justice presiding in one district has no power to make, by consolidation of actions, a transfer of a case pending in another district to the district in which he is presiding, such a transfer not being essential to the disposition of the case pending in his district, notwithstanding Municipal Court Code §§ 5, 15, and Civ.Pract. Act §§ 96, 97.—Ralph M. Levey Co. v. Fox, 200 N.Y.S. 274, 121 Misc. 113.

(4) Order removing a municipal court action and consolidating it with general assignment proceeding under debtor and creditor law is not within power of special term to make.—In re Taylor Specialty Stores, 279 N.Y.S. 567, 244 App.Div. 809.

(5) Under L.1907-1908 c 16 art 1 § 1, the district court was empowered to transfer guardianship proceeding to county court of county having jurisdiction.—McJunkin v. Turner, 267 P. 628, 131 Okl. 37—Mann v. Osborne, 261 P. 146, 128 Okl. 32.

(6) Cause at issue in superior court at time of decision, as to validity of law creating court, was pending in legally created court, as regards transfer to another court.—Isle v. Inman, 276 P. 490, 136 Okl. 77.

(7) The courts of the 30th, 78th, and 89th districts for Wichita County are separate and independent tribunals, under statute authorizing judges to transfer cases from one such district to another.—Harvey v. Wichita Nat. Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 1022.

(8) Under Remington Code 1915 §§ 46, 1774, and 1671-23, actions for penalties or fines declared by city ordinance and exceeding one hundred dollars cannot be transferred from police court of city of the third class to a justice court.—State v. Woolson, 167 P. 1088, 98 Wash. 505.

Duty to transfer

L.1915 p 487 does not make it the duty of county court to certify a cause to the district court when no stipulation to that effect has been made.—Stratton v. Rice, 181 P. 529, 66 Colo. 407.

Habeas corpus proceedings

Upon original proceeding in St. Louis court of appeals for a writ of habeas corpus it has no power to certify the cause to the supreme court.—Ex parte Webers, 205 S.W. 620, 275 Mo. 677, remanding cause 197 S.W. 850, 200 Mo.App. 23.—Ex parte Webers, 206 S.W. 244, 200 Mo. App. 368.

Injunction proceedings

(1) Under Const.1890 § 162 court of chancery, in suit wherein injunctive relief was sole relief sought, could not transfer cause to circuit court.—Barnes v. McLeod, 140 So. 740, 165 Miss. 437.

(2) Chancellor ordering issuance of writ of injunction could not transfer case to county court for hearing on whether injunction should be made perpetual.—Welch v. Bryant, 128 So. 734, 157 Miss. 559.

(3) Under Rev.St.1911 art 4653, a court issuing temporary writ enjoining enforcement of judgment properly transferred case to court rendering judgment.—Farmer v. East Texas Securities Co., Tex.Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 711.

(4) Orders setting off hearing and transferring suit to enjoin enforcement of judgment to district court, wherein rendered, made restraining order returnable thereto as required by statute.—Citizens' Bank v. Brandau, Tex.Civ.App., 1 S.W.2d 466, error refused.

Suit relating to corporate bonds

Where corporate bondholders' suit

ground for a transfer.⁶⁹ Where the constitution | or statute states the grounds for transfer, a trans-was filed before suit by trustee under agreement securing bonds, transfer to court in which trustee's suit was pending was properly denied.—First Nat. Bank v. Brown, Tex.Civ. App., 34 S.W.2d 412, error dismissed, 53 S.W.2d 604, 122 Tex. 168.

Possessory actions

Gen.L.1909 c 286 §§ 7, 8, in connection with § 5 of the same act, providing for the removal from district court to the superior court of a cause for the possession of a tenement, where plaintiff or defendant makes claim for a jury trial, is mandatory and certification should be made, although the application therefor is by the plaintiff, and although a demurrer to the declaration is pending and undetermined in the district court.—Durfee v. District Court of First Judicial District, 119 A. 60, 44 R.I. 462.

Forcible entry and detainer

(1) Forcible entry and detainer action in municipal court was not transferable to district court as involving title to realty.—Music v. De Long, 229 N.W. 673, 209 Iowa 1068.

(2) Even if such action is transferable, removal is authorized only when evidence raises issue.—Mercantile State Bank v. Vogt, 226 N.W. 847, 178 Minn. 282.

(3) Under a statute providing that if defendant in forcible entry and detainer shall recognize to claimant, conditional to pay all intervening damages, etc., and that if claimant shall recognize to defendant, conditional to enter suit at next term of superior court, and that if either party neglects to recognize to adverse party, judgment shall be rendered against him as on nonsuit or default, municipal court in which forcible entry and detainer action was filed had duty to enter judgment against defendant as on default, where plaintiff filed recognizance but defendant neglected to recognize to plaintiff. The case was not in order for transfer to superior court and such had no jurisdiction to enter default.—Haskell v. Young, 184 A. 394, 134 Me. 221.

Proceedings affecting decedents' estates

(1) On due application the administration of an estate may be removed from the probate court to a court of equity for construction of a will and for administration of the estate in the latter court.—Crawford v. Carlisle, 89 So. 565, 296 Ala. 379.

(2) In suit against administrator by creditor of decedent to impress assets with special lien, thus establishing demand as preferred claim, it is not within power of circuit court, on plaintiff's failure to establish demand, to order it certified to probate court for allowance as "general" claim.—Raymuth Real Estate & Building Co. v. Robinson, 204 S.W. 276, 199 Mo.App. 515.

(3) Purpose of statute permitting transfer of litigation relating to estates of decedents to surrogate's court was avoidance of delay in settlement of decedent's estates.—In re Miller's Estate, 286 N.Y.S. 867, 158 Misc. 775.

(4) Generally, consent to transfer of litigation relating to estates of decedents from other courts to surrogate's court should be withheld, unless it appears that otherwise settlement of decedent's estate would be long delayed.—In re Miller's Estate, supra.

(5) Where action, instituted by deceased to recover for personal injuries sustained by him before enactment of personal injury survival statute, was continued in name of deceased's executor, executor was not entitled to have case transferred from supreme court to surrogate's court, since pendency of litigation would not delay settlement of estate.—In re Miller's Estate, supra.

(6) In an action brought by a legatee to construe a will and restrain the transfer of certain notes by the widow, and to settle the estate finally in chancery court, where the executor filed a cross bill and asked for affirmative relief, the chancery court acquired jurisdiction of the cause and the estate was properly ordered transferred from the county court to the chancery court there to be administered and settled.—Scholze v. Scholze, 2 Tenn.App. 80.

(7) A proceeding on a claim against testator's estate for reasonable value of services performed by daughter of testator in consideration for testator's oral agreement to devise estate to daughter, which testator, whose agreement was void because of statute of frauds, failed to do, was triable in circuit court by a jury where the daughter demanded jury trial and timely demanded that the case be sent to the circuit court for trial.—Kessler v. Olen, 280 N.W. 352, 228 Wis. 662, rehearing denied 281 N.W. 691, 228 Wis. 662.

Criminal cases

Where inferior courts are created with jurisdiction of felonies, an indictment may originate in a superior court and thence be transferred for trial to the inferior court.—Ex parte Tucker, 143 So. 700, 164 Miss. 20.

62. Md.—Wilmer v. Light St. Sav. & Bldg. Ass'n of Baltimore City, 118 A. 414, 141 Md. 238.

N.Y.—In re Sutton, 165 N.Y.S. 58, 15 C.J. p 1146 note 69.

Disqualification of judge

(1) Where surrogate disqualified himself from hearing controversy which involved establishment of marriage between petitioner and testator and became important witness against petitioner, a new trial was directed to be had in atmosphere different from that of surrogate's court and preferably in supreme court before jury, unless parties waived jury.—In re Gally's Will, 2 N.Y.S.2d 29, 253 App.Div. 905.

(2) In absence of substantial compliance with statute authorizing probate judge to certify cases to circuit court when disqualified to hear them, probate court was without jurisdiction to certify proceedings to revoke authority of an executor upon motion of probate judge, when there was no showing of disqualification of judge or that parties in interest consented to certification.—Phillips v. Blessing, Mo.App., 127 S.W.2d 62.

(3) The probate court has exclusive original jurisdiction to entertain proceedings to revoke the authority of an executor, and the circuit court can acquire jurisdiction of such proceedings only by appeal or by certification under provisions of statute authorizing probate judge to certify cases to circuit court when disqualified to determine them.—Phillips v. Blessing, supra.

(4) Where proceedings are commenced in the county court in which the county judge is a party or interested, they may be transferred to the circuit court.—In re Bethel's Estate, 209 P. 311, 111 Or. 178.

Case improper for judge to try

Transfer of suit to enforce judgment by sale of land and application of proceeds on debt to city corporation court by circuit court judge, deeming it improper for him to preside at hearing, is valid as expressly authorized by statute, although transfers in other ways are authorized by other statutes.—Woodhouse v. Burke & Herbert Bank & Trust Co., 185 S.E. 876, 166 Va. 706.

Where party cannot have fair trial

Const. art 4 § 8, allowing removal where party cannot have a fair trial, etc., does not apply to equity cases.—Wilmer v. Light St. Sav. & Bldg. Ass'n of Baltimore City, 118 A. 414, 141 Md. 238—Cooke v. Cooke, 41 Md. 362.

Facilitating proceedings

(1) Action in New York city court involving ownership of proceeds of life policy issued upon life of son of deceased whose estate was being administered in surrogate's court would be transferred to surrogate's court where winding up of each of estates involved would thereby be fer on other grounds is improper.⁷⁰ A petition for | a transfer will also be denied where the cause is, facilitated.—In re Burza's Estate, 274 N.Y.S. 811, 153 Misc. 112.

(2) City court case growing out of same accident as case in supreme court should be removed and actions consolidated.—Goltz v. Art Awning Mfg. Co., 260 N.Y.S. 162, 145 Misc. 754.

(3) Where statute authorized president justice of municipal court of New York City to transfer cases from one district to another to facilitate business of court, order transferring case to effect efficient administration of justice as well as to otherwise facilitate transaction of business of court was proper.—Millhauser v. Schwach, 273 N.Y.S. 944, 152 Misc. 546.

(4) That reason for transferring jury case was excessive demands for jury trials and prejudicial sentiment of community precluding fair trial was held not to prevent transfer tending, in opinion of president justice, to effect justice and facilitate business of court.—Millhauser v. Schwach, supra.

(5) Order of president justice of municipal court of New York City transferring jury cases from fifth to fourth district, and providing that justice assigned to fifth district should sit at trial of transferred cases, was not invalid as leaving fifth district without justice, since president justice could assign another judge to sit in fifth district.—Millhauser v. Schwach, supra.

(6) President justice of municipal court of New York City could transfer to another district summary proceeding affecting real estate begun in district in which real estate was situated, where either party demanded jury trial or president justice determined that emergency existed.—Millhauser v. Schwach, supra.

(7) He could transfer to another district in same borough summary proceeding by landlord against tenant brought in district where property was situated where jury trial was demanded and president justice determined that landlord could not obtain fair trial within district.—Millhauser v. Schwach, supra.

(8) Where there was no showing that order transferring jury case was not made in good faith, contention that order was oppressive and unreasonable would not be sustained.—Millhauser v. Schwach, supra.

(9) Surrogate's consent to transfer from supreme court to surrogate's court of action against estate for board, lodging, and medical care would be granted, where action was brought pending hearing on issues raised by claimant's objections to disallowance of his claim and claimant subsequently declined opportunity of trial in surrogate's court, and where only obstacle to final distribution to next of kin was pendency of action and its continuance in supreme court would result in delay due to unavoidable calendar congestion.—In re Pfersich's Estate, 275 N.Y.S. 928, 153 Misc. 609.

Transfer to another department or division

(1) Where justice of appellate division who sat upon the argument of particular appeals died, and remaining justices qualified to hear the appeals were equally divided, the court directed the appeals to be sent to another department of the appellate division to be heard and determined.—People v. Mieske, 13 N.Y.S. 2d 699, 257 App.Div. 1066.

(2) Under Const.1898 art 134, and rules of civil district court, judge of one division of that court could not transfer a cause allotted to his division to another division because suit arising from same accident and against same defendant, with others, was previously allotted to the latter division, and was discontinued pending submission of exceptions, and another suit against one defendant had been brought.—James v. St. Charles Hotel Co., 77 So. 117, 142 La. 464.

Nonresidence of parties

(1) City court of city of New York having jurisdiction of subject matter and having acquired jurisdiction of parties, mere nonresidence of parties within its territorial jurisdiction is not sufficient ground for removal of cause to supreme court of another county, in view of New York City Court Act §§ 18, 19, 22, L1920 c 935, but motion must be founded on grounds specified in Civ. Pract.Act § 187, for changing place of trial.—Harris v. Hellyer, 206 N.Y.S. 287, 210 App.Div. 399.

(2) Action in municipal court without jury, brought in district where neither party resided nor had place of business, could be transferred to proper district.—Grady v. Selden Truck Corporation, 231 N.Y.S. 255, 133 Misc. 97.

Rights of claimant of property seized under execution

Where claimant of proceeds of property seized under fieri facias from city court, jurisdiction of which is limited by Const.1921 art 7 § 91 pars 1 and 3, is thereby prevented from going before that court to contest his claim with creditor in fieri facias, he can compel creditor to come into civil district court to litigate claim.—San-I-Baker Cor- poration v. Magendie, 102 So. 821, 157 La. 643.

Miscellaneous grounds

(1) Removal of settlement of guardianship from probate to chancery court was proper where guardian's surety alleged fraudulent collusion between two guardians and ward to procure unjust decree, insolvency of guardian, and sought discovery and accounting of numerous complicated matters peculiar to powers and jurisdiction of chancery court.—Ex parte Brown, 148 So. 132, 226 Ala. 578.

(2) Judgment creditors' suit against surety on insolvent foreign insurance company's qualifying bond was properly transferred to court where receivership proceedings were pending, and which would have possession of common fund to which creditors must look for payment of claims.—Cognovich v. Sun Indemnity Co. of New York, 145 So. 774, 176 La. 373.

(3) Plaintiff pleading permanent injuries is entitled to change of forum from city court to supreme court in order to recover larger sum.—Morris v. Perelman, 260 N.Y.S. 354, 145 Misc. 892, affirmed 261 N.Y.S. 986, 237 App.Div. 857.

(4) Where, when action for installments of rent, amounting to one thousand two hundred fifty-eight dollars and thirty cents, under guaranty, was commenced in city court of New York, plaintiff had recovered in supreme court judgment for over two thousand dollars for previous installments, but, after action in city court was commenced, judgment in supreme court was vacated, plaintiff was entitled to removal of action from city court into supreme court, under Code Civ.Proc. § 319a subd 2.—In re Sutton, 165 N.Y.S. 58.

(5) President justice cannot transfer action from one district to another district because action was not begun in district specified in municipal court act.—Grady v. Selden Truck Corporation, 231 N.Y.S. 255, 133 Misc. 97.

(6) In an action where a case was tried before a judge of one division and a mistrial was had and the case was thereafter reassigned by the presiding judge to another division for trial, because the first judge was busy engaged in trying other cases, it was held that the fact that the judge was busy constituted good cause for transferring the case.—Bry-Block Mercantile Co. v. Byrd, 4 Tenn.App. 178.

70. La.—James v. St. Charles Hotel Co., 77 So. 117, 142 La. 464. N.Y.—Retting v. Baff, 200 N.Y.S. 252, 130 Misc. 650.

in effect, already in the court to which the transfer is asked.⁷¹ In order that a petition to transfer a case may be entertained there must be a pending case to be transferred.⁷² The pendency of an appeal does not deprive a court of its jurisdiction to transfer the cause to another court of coordinate jurisdiction.⁷³ It has been held that a statute permitting the transfer of "actions" to another court is inapplicable to summary proceedings;⁷⁴ that a statute authorizing the transfer of cases "commenced" in a certain court did not authorize the transfer of a case coming to such court on appeal from a justice of the peace;⁷⁵ that a statute providing that "actions at law" in the supreme court may be transferred to the surrogate court was not intended to include actions in equity, notwithstanding the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished,⁷⁶ and that proceedings in a county court to set aside a homestead to a widow cannot be transferred to the district court under a statute authorizing such transfer where title to or boundary of land is involved.⁷⁷ An appellate court will not transfer jurisdiction of disbarment proceedings instituted therein to another court, even though such court may have concurrent jurisdiction of the proceedings.⁷⁸

§ 503. Discretion of Court

The transfer of a cause is sometimes left to the discretion of the court, but where the statute is mandatory a transfer does not involve judicial discretion.

The transfer of a case is sometimes left to a considerable extent to the sound discretion of the court;⁷⁹ and where it is provided by statute that when a case has been pending in a certain court for a certain period of time it shall be removed to another court on motion, without notice, although no discretion is left to the court as to the cause of removal, yet some discretion is conferred 71. N.Y.—Retting v. Baff, supra.

On the acceptance by plaintiff's attorney of answer entitled in "Supreme Court," the action is effectually instituted in that court, although the summons and complaint were entitled in the "County Court," and hence a removal from the county court to the supreme court, even if such an order might be made, is unnecessary and will be denied.—Retting v. Baff, supra.

72. Miss.—Baker v. Moore, 169 So. 773, 176 Miss. 431.

N.J.—Lunger v. Page, 2 A.2d 606, 16 N.J.Misc. 529.

Void proceedings

Where attachment proceedings in district court against nonresident executor were void, proceedings were not "pending" within statute permitting the district court to transfer a "pending" action to an appropriate tribunal if the court is without jurisdiction of the subject matter.—Lunger v. Page, supra.

Want of process

Where no summons issued from circuit court wherein detainee action purportedly originated, order of removal to corporation court did not give corporation court jurisdiction, hence such court should have sustained specially appearing defendant's motion to quash writ of seizure.—Preston v. Legard, 168 S.E. 445, 160 Va. 364.

Where cause dismissed in county court, and no appeal taken, circuit court properly refused to entertain petition to transfer case to circuit court.—Baker v. Moore, 169 So. 773, 176 Miss. 431.

Compelling support of minor child Priv. & Sp. L.1919 c 3 § 2 subd 4, providing that, where the demand exceeds twenty dollars, "actions" brought in municipal court may on defendant's motion be removed to the superior court, does not apply to petitions brought under Rev.St. c 66 § 9 to compel a father's contribution to support of minor child, since such proceeding is summary, and not an "action" within the meaning of the removal statute, and since to allow removal would serve same purpose as an appeal which does not lie.—Head v. Fuller, supra.

76. N.Y.—In re Pedrette's Estate, 274 N.Y.S. 607, 153 Misc. 106.

Action held not in equity

Action against executor to recover amount which testator allegedly agreed to bequeath in consideration of services rendered and of moneys expended in testator's behalf during his last illness was not "action in equity" so as to bar transfer of action from supreme court to surrogate's court.—In re Franklin's Estate, 274 N.Y.S. 612, 153 Misc. 110.

77. Okl.—Tarman v. Pierce, 33 P.2d 203, 168 Okl. 348.

Tex.—Kraker v. Bettman-Kleinhauer Clothing Co., Civ.App., 12 S.W.2d 247.

15 C.J. p 1146 note 70.

Discretion properly exercised

(1) Where mandamus could not be successfully maintained, trial court was not required to dismiss action but could, in its discretion, permit plaintiff to file additional or amended pleadings in order that he might establish such right as he might have, especially where necessary parties have been served with summons and were in court, and although summons was returnable in a county other than its issuance, the case could be transferred to civil issue docket of proper county.—Harris v. Board of Education of Vance County, 4 S.E.2d 328, 216 N.C. 147.

(2) Refusal to transfer suit by private citizen to enjoin operation of pari-mutuel system of betting on dog races to district court in which was pending suit by operators of dog-racing plant to enjoin district attorney from maintaining criminal prosecutions for operation of such system and from instituting civil proceedings interfering with operation of such system, was not abuse of discretion.—Oak Downs, Inc. v. Schmid, Civ.App., 95 S.W.2d 1040, reversed on other grounds 97 S.W.2d 671, 128 Tex. 214.

Discretion improperly exercised

Denial of application for removal of action from city court of Yonkers to supreme court, New York County, was improper exercise of discretion where all but one of defendant's necessary and material witnesses were residents of New York County, and city court of Yonkers was without power to issue its subpoena for service outside county of Westchester.—Application of John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. of Boston, Mass., 295 N.Y.S. 152, 250 App.Div. 879.

upon it as to the time when the motion will be entertained.⁸⁰ On the other hand, statutes requiring the transfer of causes have been held mandatory, and, where the statutory ground for a transfer exists, the court has no discretion in the matter.⁸¹

§ 504. Issues of Fact

Issues of fact may in some cases be transferred to another court for trial, but not issues of law, or issues dependent on both law and fact.

Issues of fact may in some cases be transmitted from one court to another for trial;⁸² but a similar rule does not apply to issues of law,⁸³ and where an issue depends on both law and fact, it cannot be sent to another court.⁸⁴

Statute held mandatory

Statute providing that in counties in which superior court is held at county seat, and at no other place, judges of superior courts and judges of district courts shall, on motion, transfer cause to district or superior court, is mandatory, and order of transfer does not involve judicial discretion.—Acme Oil & Gas Co. v. Cooper, 33 P.2d 191, 168 Okl. 346.

Nonresidence of party

Code Suppl.1907 § 261 held mandatory as to transfer of causes from superior to district courts, when defendant's nonresidence is shown, and superior court has no discretion.—Corn Belt Telephone Co. v. Superior Court of City of Oelwein, 164 N.W. 168, 180 Iowa 985.

Issue of fact not involved

In statutory proceeding to review determination of public service commission, which denied gas company right to use pipe line crossing public highways, on ground that company had no right to obtain consents of local authorities to use of public highways, no "triable issue of fact" within statutory provision was presented, notwithstanding answer denying certain allegations of petition, and hence special term could dispose of cause on merits rather than transfer proceeding to appellate division.—Penn-York Natural Gas Corporation v. Maltbie, 299 N.Y.S. 1004, 164 Misc. 569.

Causes properly transferred

(1) In an action by the city of Madera in the recorder's court to recover from a sewer user a charge, levied upon him by ordinance, constituting a tax, impost, and toll within Const. art 6 § 5, providing that the superior court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction of a case involving the legality of any such charge, it appearing from the answer that the legality of the charge was involved, the recorder should have transferred the cause to the superior court.—City of Madera v. Black, 184 P. 397, 181 Cal. 306.

(2) Plaintiffs, erroneously suing in county court to enforce mechanic's lien, are entitled, under Civ.Pract.Act § 110, to remove action to supreme court.—Luther v. Silver, 223 N.Y.S. 468, 130 Misc. 21.

(3) Court wherein suit to set compensation award aside is filed, on ascertaining suit should be tried in county where injury occurred, must transfer cause to such other county.—Lloyds Casualty Co. of New York v. Lem, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 497, error dismissed.

Amount in controversy

Where complaint in action in city court sought recovery of amount beyond its monetary jurisdiction, action should be removed to proper court under Civ.Pract.Act § 110.—De Lisa v. Trifoglio Const. Co., 266 N.

§ 505. Actions Brought in Court without Jurisdiction

Actions brought in a court without jurisdiction should be dismissed and not transferred to another court, unless the statute authorizes such transfer. The filing of a counterclaim for liquidated damages in excess of the court's jurisdiction is ground for a transfer of the cause under some statutes.

Where an action is brought in a court which has no jurisdiction thereof, such court has no power to transfer the action to another court having jurisdiction to entertain it, but should dismiss it,⁸⁵ unless provision is made by statute for the transfer of cases under such circumstances;⁸⁶ but such a statute does not authorize a court which has jurisdiction of a cause to transfer it to another court.⁸⁷

Causes held within jurisdiction of removing court

(1) The district court has jurisdiction over the subject matter of an action commenced by attachment for work done and services rendered so as to preclude transfer of the cause under statute limiting the court's power of transfer to cases in which the court is without jurisdiction of the subject matter.—Lunger v. Page, 2 A.2d 606, 16 N.J.Misc. 529.

(2) Count which was in effect a proceeding in unlawful detainer involving monthly rental value of more than two hundred dollars, stated cause of action within jurisdiction of superior court, and one which was not transferable to municipal court.—Cook v. Winklefleck, 59 P.2d 463, 16 Cal.App.2d Supp. 759.

(3) Count which was substantially an action of ejectment involving property of value in excess of three thousand dollars stated cause of action within jurisdiction of superior court, and one which was not transferable to municipal court.—Cook v. Winklefleck, supra.

(4) That superior court acting upon the evidence exercised its discretion against granting of declaratory relief did not alter nature of action brought therefor from one for declaratory relief to one for incidental relief asked for in the nature of money judgment, and hence superior court was not warranted in transferring case to municipal court on theory action was one for recovery of money judgment only.—Cook v. Winklefleck, supra.

It has been held that if, prior to final judgment, a matter arises judicially which discloses that the apparent jurisdiction of the court no longer exists, the action shall be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, or be transferred to a tribunal having jurisdiction.⁸⁸

Effect of counterclaim exceeding jurisdiction. Under some statutes, where it appears that a counterclaim will necessarily involve the determination of questions not within the jurisdiction of the court, the action should be transferred to a court having jurisdiction;⁸⁹ but if the statute provides that, on filing a counterclaim for liquidated damages exceeding the jurisdiction of the district court, the cause may be transferred by the judge of that court to the circuit court, the filing of a counterclaim for unliquidated damages does not authorize a transfer.⁹⁰

(5) Nor was transfer warranted on theory that action was one for the incidental relief asked for in the nature of a money judgment, since action for declaratory relief being essentially an equitable proceeding, superior court having once obtained jurisdiction should have retained it and determined the entire case.—Cook v. Winklefleck, supra.

(6) Where causes of action stated in second and third counts of complaint were within jurisdiction of superior court only, cause of action stated in first count, even if it were within jurisdiction of municipal court, could not be transferred there by superior court, since an action could be transferred only as a unit.—Cook v. Winklefleck, supra.

Suit for alimony

(1) The chancery court has full jurisdiction in suits for alimony under Const.1890 § 159, and may entertain a suit by the wife against sureties on the husband's bond to pay alimony, where the bond is given in accordance with a decree of the court. It is therefore error for the chancery court to transfer such suit to the circuit court against the consent of the complainant. It is only in cases where the circuit court has "exclusive jurisdiction" that a cause may be transferred under Const.1890 § 162, unless by consent of the parties.—Cadenhead v. Estes, 99 So. 361, 134 Miss. 569.

(2) Where none of the sureties on a bond for alimony lived in the county where a decree for alimony was rendered, and to satisfy which a bond was given by the defendant in the alimony suit and the sureties on such bond, a suit on the bond may be brought in the chancery court of the county where some of the sureties live, and such suit will be regarded as ancillary to the court where the alimony suit is pending, and in such case the sureties may not have the cause transferred to the circuit court.—Cadenhead v. Estes, supra.

Statute held mandatory

Cal.—Brady v. Kobey, 81 P.2d 263, 27 Cal.App.2d 505.

Choice of remedies

Where defendant, sued in municipal court, has counterclaim not within jurisdiction of such court, he may plead counterclaim and have municipal court transfer cause to proper court, or he may bring suit on claim in superior court.—Stratton v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 43 P.2d 539, 2 Cal.2d 693.

Amendment of counterclaim increasing amount

Where the civil court acquired jurisdiction of the parties and over the causes stated in the complaint and counterclaims as first interposed, but had no jurisdiction over one of the counterclaims after amendment increasing the amount, the civil court could either dismiss such amended counterclaim or certify it to the circuit court, and, where it so certified, defendant was not prejudiced.—Sells v. Elmergreen, 198 N.W. 267, 183 Wis. 532.

90. N.J.—Brown v. Schwartz, 165 A. 100, 11 N.J.Misc. 196—Toone v. Skorupski, 154 A. 621, 9 N.J.Misc. 381—Tigler v. Fabrics Finishing Corporation, 150 A. 228, 8 N.J.Misc. 303.

What are liquidated damages

(1) "Liquidated damages" within

How want of jurisdiction shown. Under a statute providing for the transfer of a cause to a court having jurisdiction where it appears from the pleadings or at the trial that the determination of the action, or of a counterclaim or cross complaint, will involve questions not within the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is pending, such court has no power to transfer the cause unless its want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the pleadings or from the evidence introduced in support thereof.⁹¹

§ 506. Waiver of Right to Transfer

The right to the transfer of a cause to another court may be waived.

The right to have a cause transferred from one court to another may be waived;⁹² it is held, by delay in making an application therefor,⁹³ by submitting to the jurisdiction without objection,⁹⁴ by

(2) Counterclaim for damages based on plaintiff's procuring defendant's wrongful discharge from employment was not for "liquidated damages," precluding removal of case from district to circuit court.—Toone v. Skorupski, supra.

An order of the circuit court wherein defendant filed counterclaim for one thousand dollars damages to action begun in district court, directing transfer of case to circuit court, was void.—Brown v. Schwartz, 165 A. 100, 11 N.J.Misc. 196.

91. Cal.—Stratton v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 43 P.2d 539, 2 Cal.2d 693.

Municipal court cannot transfer cause to superior court where defendant filed no pleadings in municipal court raising issues beyond such court's jurisdiction, but merely showed that defendant had instituted in superior court an action for damages, in excess of municipal court's jurisdiction, for fraudulent inducement of contract sued on in municipal court.—Stratton v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, supra.

obtaining an adjournment after issue joined,⁹⁵ or by other conduct inconsistent with an intention to assert or to insist upon such right;⁹⁶ but the right is not waived by demanding a bill of particulars, where defendants acted promptly and the demand did not cause an adjournment,⁹⁷ by obtaining an adjournment in order to join issue and make a motion for a transfer,⁹⁸ by a motion to dismiss the complaint, when based on proceedings preliminary to the joinder of issue,⁹⁹ by proceeding to trial after denial of a motion for a transfer,¹ or by an ineffectual trial.²

§ 507. Mode of Effecting Transfer and Procedure Therefor

To effect a valid transfer of a cause the statutes or rules of court relating thereto must be complied with. Under the various statutes the court wherein an action is pending may direct its transfer from one subordinate court to another, or may direct a transfer to itself of a cause pending in a subordinate court.

prescribing their jurisdiction and mode of procedure, judge of fifty-fifth judicial district, in absence of judge of eightieth district court, was authorized to transfer pending suit of trespass to try title from eightieth district court to his court, and order of transfer so made was as valid and binding as if made by judge of eightieth district.—*Porch v. In effecting a transfer of a cause from one court to another, there should be a compliance with the requirements of the statute on the subject,³ while a transfer from one department to another of the same court must be made in accordance with the rules of the court relating to such transfer.⁴ An irregularity in the transfer may, however, be waived.⁵

Jurisdiction to direct transfer. Under some statutes the transfer is ordered by the court in which the case is pending and from which a transfer is sought,⁶ while under others the higher courts of the state are authorized to direct transfers from one subordinate court to another,⁷ or a higher court may in some instances direct the transfer of a cause to itself from a subordinate court.⁸

Fees for custody of attached property

Where, in an action in the district court, property is attached as that of defendant, and on petition properly presented the district court makes an allowance to the sheriff for keeper's fees and custody of the property, defendant, on judgment rendered for plaintiff, must include such allowance in his tender of costs to the district court to entitle him to have the case certified to the superior court for jury trial.—Trotter Plastering Co. v. District Court of Sixth Judicial Dist., R.I., 123 A. 358.

transfer of a cause depends on the statutes. One who has no interest in a cause is not a proper party to proceedings for its transfer.

A transfer may be effectively sought by, and only by, a party who, under the statute, is entitled to have the case transferred if the grounds alleged therefor are sustained,⁹ and where the statute provides that a transfer may be had on the application of a defendant a cause will not be removed on the application of one of several defendants.¹⁰

Parties. One who has no interest in the cause is not a proper party to the proceedings for the transfer.¹¹

§ 509. — Time for Application

The application for a transfer must be seasonably made, and must not be premature.

The time at which an application for a transfer may be made is governed largely by constitutional and statutory provisions.¹² A defendant cannot move for a transfer until he has appeared in the cause;¹³ but under some statutes such an application by defendant must be made at or before the joinder of issue,¹⁴ or before an adjournment is granted.¹⁵ A cause cannot be transferred after a judgment by default has been rendered,¹⁶ and, by the same course of reasoning, after a motion has been made for a default judgment the right of transfer is in suspense until the motion has been decided.¹⁷ So it has been held that a removal of a cause to an inferior court exercising concurrent jurisdiction is improper where the proceedings are at such a stage that the removal would practically give the inferior court powers of review.¹⁸ Proceedings for divorce have been held removable after the issuance of a preliminary injunction restraining defendant from disposing of his property and after defendant has entered appearance;¹⁹ but a motion for removal, made after verdict for defendant and before a motion for a new trial by plaintiff has been acted upon, should not be granted, although the statute with respect to the transfer of causes provides that "where any suit . . . shall have remained pending in a county court more than one year without being determined, such court on motion of any party to such suit . . . shall order it to

Administration of decedents' estates

(1) In Alabama under Gen. Acts 1915 p 738, a suit to remove the administration of an estate from probate to a court of equity for construction of a will may be maintained by an executor, administrator cum testamento annexo, or by a testamentary or other guardian or trustee, qualified and acting, or by any person, heir, devisee, legatee or distributee having a pecuniary or representative interest in the questions involved and the property of the decedent.—Crawford v. Carlisle, 89 So. 565, 206 Ala. 379.

(2) Under Acts 1911 p 574 § 3, an heir or distributee of an estate, or a devisee or legatee under a will, at any time before the probate court has taken steps looking to final settlement of the estate, without settling up any special equity therefor, may remove the administration of the estate from the probate court into a court of equity for further administration and final settlement.—McKeithen v. Rich, 86 So. 377, 204 Ala. 588.

(3) On the other hand it has been held that the right of an heir, legatee, or distributee to have the administration of the estate removed to the chancery court without assigning any reasons therefor does not extend to the administrator, and is not conferred by the fact that the administrator in such an attempt joins with him one of the heirs as a complainant.—Kirkbride v. Kelly, 52 So. 660, 167 Ala. 570.

Contest of will

As Rev. L. 1910 § 6210, relating to will contest, declares that contestant is plaintiff and petitioner defendant, order, transferring will contest from superior to district court on motion of contestants, is valid under a statute providing for the transfer of a cause on motion of plaintiff.—In re Nichols' Will, 166 P. 1087, 64 Okl. 241.

§ 510. — Motion or Demand for Transfer

A motion or demand for the transfer of a cause is usually necessary, and such demand must, under some statutes, be accompanied by an affidavit in the form prescribed.

Although under some statutes a cause may be transferred to another court without previous notice or motion,²² it is usually incumbent on the party desiring the transfer of a cause to make a timely motion or demand therefor,²³ and the district to which a transfer is desired must, under some statutes, be specified.²⁴ The demand for a transfer is sometimes required to be accompanied by an affidavit that the matter pleaded by the moving party is true,²⁵ or, if the application is for a transfer to another court for a trial by jury, the affidavit must state that, in the opinion of the applicant, there is an issue of fact requiring a trial, and that such trial is intended in good faith.²⁶

§ 511. — Petition for Transfer

The petition for a transfer must specify the grounds therefor and should be verified where the statute so provides.

On a proper petition to the court in which a cause is pending, the court may transfer the cause to another court.²⁷ The petition for transfer should be verified where the statute so provides,²⁸ and should show that the case is such as may be transferred, and that sufficient grounds for a transfer exist, specifying them.²⁹ An objection to the sufficiency of the petition should be made before a determination thereon.³⁰

Administration proceedings

(1) When a bill of complaint or petition in writing, verified by affidavit, is filed by a devisee or legatee of an estate, stating that in his opinion the estate can be better administered in the circuit court, equity side of the docket, than in the probate court, that there has been no final settlement of the estate in the probate court, and that no application has been made therein for a final settlement, and that the purpose is to have real estate sold for division, in that it cannot be equitably partitioned without a sale, and to require the executors to file an inventory, it is the duty of the circuit court to enter a decree ordering the removal of the administration from the probate court to the circuit court, under Acts 1911 p 574 § 3, as amended by Acts 1915 p 738.—Parker v. Robertson, 88 So. 418, 205 Ala. 434.

(2) The court did not improvidently order removal to chancery court, although bill was not framed to meet Acts 1915 p 738, authorizing summary order for removal, where respondents demurred, without denying the will, its probate, the pendency of the administration in probate court or that complainant had not been paid her legacy.—Gurley v. Bushnell, 76 So. 324, 200 Ala. 408.

(3) The bill need not allege that decedent died, or that the estate had assets in the county in which the administration is pending, those facts being referable to the issuance of letters of administration by the probate court.—Colquitt v. Gill, 41 So. 784, 147 Ala. 554.

(4) The bill or petition is insufficient if it does not contain an averment the equivalent of the statutory requirement that testator's estate can be better administered in the circuit court in equity.—Dooley v. Dooley, 87 So. 545, 205 Ala. 281.

(5) Where, from aught appearing in the bill, testator's estate, except the distribution of the proceeds of sale of land the possibility of which depends upon whether the terms of the will were complied with, had been fully settled long before filing of the bill, or, if not so, steps had been taken in the probate court looking to final settlement, the bill will not warrant a decree of removal to the chancery court in the absence of averment of some special equity.—Dooley v. Dooley, supra.

Guardianship proceedings

While surety on guardian's bond is interested party, he has no right to remove settlement of guardianship to chancery court without averring a special equity where jurisdiction to make final settlement has attached.—Ex parte Brown, 148 So. 132, 226 Ala. 578—Ex parte Chapman, 142 So. 540, 225 Ala. 163.

Unlawful detainer

Defendant's petition to remove unlawful detainer case from municipal to circuit court, since omitting jurisdictional averments regarding defendant's entry upon land, did not authorize removal.—Ex parte Lockhart, 140 So. 762, 224 Ala. 517.

30. Ind.—Kraus v. Lehman, 83-N.E.

§ 512. — Bond or Undertaking

A defendant seeking a transfer must comply with the statute by tendering within the prescribed time a sufficient bond or undertaking.

Where the statute requires a defendant desiring the transfer of a cause to another court to tender a bond or undertaking, failure to comply with the statute³¹ within the prescribed time,³² by tendering a bond or undertaking sufficient in form and substance,³³ deprives defendant of the right to a transfer. Where the required bond is given, the court must order a transfer of the cause, and it has no jurisdiction to grant plaintiff's application for dismissal of the action.³⁴ Irregularities in the bond may be waived.³⁵

§ 513. — Hearing and Order

To effect a valid transfer of a cause there must ordinarily be a hearing, and an order of transfer.

A court is not required to transfer a case on a mere assertion that it is in the wrong court, but may set down the matter for a hearing.³⁶

Order. The transfer of a cause from one court to another must ordinarily be effected by an order of court directing the transfer,³⁷ but such an order may be unnecessary where a court is abolished by constitutional provision and its jurisdiction vested in another court.³⁸ Where proceedings have been instituted timely but in the wrong court, and the judges of the two courts are the same, the one in which the proceedings were instituted may, even after final judgment, make an order transferring the proceedings to the proper court nunc pro tunc.³⁹ A transfer is effected by a lawful order of transfer, rather than by the clerk's ministerial act of entering it on the minutes.⁴⁰ So it has been held that an order of transfer entered on the journal or minutes of the court transferring the cause confers jurisdiction on the court to which the transfer is made, although the order is not included in the transcript transmitting the proceedings nor docketed in the court to which the cause is transferred.⁴¹ However, the court to which a cause is transferred acquires no jurisdiction where a certified copy of the order of removal is not served on the adverse party, as required by statute.⁴² Since the jurisdiction of the supreme court extends over the state, it is not improper in an original proceeding in that court to lay the venue as of the county in which the cause of action arose or would be triable if the action were brought in the circuit court; but where the supreme court sends a case to a circuit court it orders the cause to be sent to the county of the proper venue.⁴³ An order transferring a cause is final

Causes included

An order of seventh district court of Smith County transferring certain causes of action to special district court of such county, which order did not transfer cases in which service of process was not complete, did not effect a transfer of a cause wherein record did not disclose service on interveners' cross action at or before date of order of transfer, and which disclosed that for nearly two months after entry of transfer order, judge of district court was exercising jurisdiction over such cause of action and appointed receiver therein, and hence special district court had no jurisdiction of such action.—Whitfield v. Atkinson, Tex.Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 804.

and conclusive until reversed or set aside by regular proceedings;⁴⁴ but an order of transfer, void on the face of the record, is assailable wherever and whenever it may be produced, and whether the attack on it is direct or collateral.⁴⁵ It has been held that an order of the court of last resort transferring a cause to a subordinate appellate court for want of jurisdiction is not res judicata as to certiorari proceedings to quash the judgment of the subordinate court, whether the court of last resort had merely passed on its own jurisdiction, or had undertaken to adjudicate the jurisdiction of the subordinate court.⁴⁶

§ 514. — Transfer of Papers

The papers in a transferred cause, so far as necessary for a determination of the issues, should be transmitted to the court to which the transfer is made; but the jurisdiction of such court is not defeated by the clerk's failure to certify the record at the proper time, if there is a subsequent certification.

While the papers and records of a cause should be transmitted or certified to the court to which the cause is transferred,⁴⁷ nevertheless if an issue can be tried intelligently without the original petition a transfer of such petition as part of the papers in the case has been held unnecessary.⁴⁸ Where by a special law authorizing the transfer of the administration of an estate to another county, a transmission by the probate judge was required of the administrator's original bond with a full and complete copy of the record of all proceedings theretofore had, it was held that the acts of the court to which the cause was transferred were not rendered void by the accidental omission of the proceedings during the original administration.⁴⁹ Where papers are certified back, as required by statute, to the court from which the cause was transmitted, and an order is made in the case by the court to which it was removed, the latter court has no jurisdiction to set aside the order and recall the papers.⁵⁰ The failure of the clerk, at the proper time, to perform his duty to certify the record from the court in which it is pending to the court to which the case is transferred, cannot defeat the jurisdiction of the latter court on subsequent certification.⁵¹ Where a subordinate court had jurisdiction of a cause when it certified a question to the court of last resort, the former court did not lose jurisdiction because its clerk, acting ministerially, did not transmit to the higher court a certified copy of the question, with the record, until after the second term after the writ was brought.⁵² On a second removal of a cause the trial may be had on the papers sent with the first removal.⁵³

§ 515. — Transfer by Stipulation or Agreement

Transfers to another court may in some states be made by agreement of the parties; but a cause cannot even by consent be transferred to a court which has no jurisdiction of the subject matter.

In some states a transfer may be effected by a stipulation or agreement of the parties,⁵⁴ which has the effect of vesting the court to which the transfer is made with jurisdiction of the persons of the parties.⁵⁵ However, as consent cannot give jurisdiction of the subject matter, as stated supra § 85, a case cannot, by consent of parties, be transferred to a court which has no jurisdiction to hear it.⁵⁶

Death of party

Since death of party ends power of his attorney, petition by attorneys to transfer cause from appellate to supreme court was nullity.—Elliott v. Kern, supra.

In California the supreme court may transfer to itself certiorari proceeding in district court of appeal relating to assessment for public improvements, on petition of one not a party to the proceeding.—Rockridge Place Co. v. City Council of City of Oakland, 172 P. 1110, 178 Cal. 58.

58. In California

(1) A petition to transfer a cause from the court of appeal to the supreme court, filed more than ten days after the judgment in the former court became final, will be stricken from the files.—Hewlett v. Beede, 83 P. 1089, 7 Cal.A.Unrep.Cas. 246, denying transfer 83 P. 1086, 2 Cal.App. 561.

(2) Application to have cause heard by supreme court after judgment in district court of appeal had been pronounced, but before it had become final, was denied in view of constitutional provision granting supreme court power to order cause to be heard by supreme court only where cause was pending before district court of appeal, or in civil cases, within thirty days after judgment should have become final.—City of Pasadena v. Chamberlain, 36 P.2d 392, 1 Cal.App.2d 125, denying hearing 36 P.2d 387, 1 Cal.App.2d 125.

(3) Where a judgment was rendered by a district court of appeal on Jan. 8, 1906, reversing the order appealed from, and on February 7 following, the court denied a petition for rehearing, but modified its opinion, without changing the final judgment, the judgment became final thirty days after Jan. 8, 1906, and hence an application to transfer the case to the supreme court in banc, filed March 12, 1906, was not filed within sixty days, as required by Const. art 6 § 4, and was therefore too late.—California Nat. Bank v. Los Angeles Iron, etc., Co., 84 P. 466, 468, 2 Cal.App. 659.

(4) Under Const. art 6 § 4, authorizing the supreme court to order any cause pending before the district court of appeal to be heard by the supreme court before judgment has been pronounced by the district court of appeal, or within thirty days after such judgment shall have become final, without limiting the power to causes in which a petition for rehearing has been filed, the supreme court had the power to transfer the cause to the supreme court after decision in the district court of appeal at any time within sixty days after such decision, notwithstanding rule requiring petition for a rehearing to be filed within ten days after the judgment has become final, since supreme court could have ordered cause transferred for a rehearing on its own motion without a petition for rehearing.—Hygienic Health Food Co. v. Grant, 204 P. 389, 188 Cal. 131, denying motion 202 P. 653, 187 Cal. 431.

In Colorado a motion to remove a case from the court of appeals to the supreme court, made after the calling of the submission docket and the assignment of the case for argument, but before argument, was held to be made too late to permit the review of the trial court's judgment by the supreme court.—Smislaert v. Prudential Ins. Co., 61 P. 598, 27 Colo. 339.

In Indiana

(1) Petition for transfer of cause from appellate court to supreme court under Burns St.Annot.1914 § 1394, more than eight months after statutory time for filing petition, will be denied by the supreme court, in the absence of a showing of diligence.—Pipe Creek School Tp. v. Wagler, 143 N.E. 514, 194 Ind. 496, denying transfer Pipe Creek School Tp., Miami County, v. Wagler, 139 N. E. 295, 81 Ind.App. 419.

(2) Petition for transfer will be denied where prematurely filed.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Frankel, 104 N.E. 856, denying transfer 103 N.E. 501, 58 Ind.App. 115.

In Missouri, after the expiration of the term at which a final decision has been entered by a court of appeals in Missouri, it has no jurisdiction to make an order transferring the cause to the supreme court, and its only remaining jurisdiction is to order its mandate to the trial court.—Hess v. Gansz, 90 Mo.App. 439.

In Texas

(1) Rev.St. art 1623, requiring courts of civil appeals in case of conflict to certify questions of law to supreme court, does not authorize such courts even on their own motion to take any action after their judgment has become final, by term of court expiring, and court having at such time finally disposed of all questions that had been brought to their attention.—Wood v. Harper, 262 S.W. 248, 114 Tex. 133.

(2) Where motion to certify to supreme court was filed six days after motion for rehearing was overruled, and to grant motion the order overruling motion for rehearing would have to be set aside, and no good reason for such action exists, the motion to certify will be refused.—Paggi v. Rose Mfg. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 259 S.W. 962.

59. In California, where notice is of an appeal to the wrong court, the proper practice is to file the record in the court to which the appeal is taken, and to make a motion in that court to transfer the cause.—In re Russell, 84 P. 155, 148 Cal. 768.

60. In California

(1) Supreme court decisions on applications for transfers to it from the district courts of appeals must be made under its own rules and within ten days, as required by Const. art 6 § 4, and rule 30, 177 Cal. 57.—Whann v. Doell, 221 P. 899, 192 Cal. 680.

(2) Petition for hearing of cause in supreme court was denied by operation of law, where order granting hearing was not concurred in by necessary number of justices, and time expired within which court could make such order after judgment in district court of appeal.—Giometti v. Etienne, 25 P.2d 826, denying rehearing 23 P.2d 52, 132 Cal. App. 602, and motion denied 23 P.2d 913, 219 Cal. 687.

In Louisiana

(1) The supreme court will not assume jurisdiction over a case in the absence of an order in the record of the court of appeal transferring the case.—In re Land Development Co., 85 So. 118, 148 La. 925.

(2) Court of appeal will by supplemental order fix time for filing record in supreme court on appellee's motion, where appeal was transferred.—Jones v. Gleason, 120 So. 703, 10 La.App. 211, supplementing 120 So. 101, 9 La.App. 266.

(4) Appellee, apparently acquiescing in appellate court's refusal to fix time limit for filing transcript after transfer of appeal, was not entitled to dismissal.—Scott v. Ratchiff, supra.

In Pennsylvania, where appeals from supervisors' audit had been taken in proper time but mistakenly filed in quarter sessions court, order, after time within which new appeals could be taken, transferring appeals to common pleas courts nunc pro tunc, was proper.—Appeal of Fields, 157 A. 262, 305 P. 125.

In Texas it was held that, since, under Sayles Civ.St.Annot. 1897, art 1387, appeals generally are perfected when the bond is filed, the court of civil appeals for the seventh district, creation of which became operative June 9, 1911, under the act of April 3, 1911, Acts 32d Leg. c 120, has no jurisdiction of an appeal, where the bond was filed May 25, 1911, and no order of the supreme court transferring the cause to the new court is shown.—Keator v. Whittaker, Tex.Civ.App., 140 S.W. 120.

61. In Missouri a certificate transferring a case from a court of appeals to the supreme court, on the ground of an alleged conflict with opinions of another court of appeals, but containing no certification by the court or one of the judges that there was a conflict, but merely reciting that plaintiff claimed a conflict, was ineffective to confer jurisdiction, under Const.Amendm. 1884 § 6.—Woodson v. Leo-Greenwald Vinegar Co., 264 S.W. 674.

62. In Illinois

(1) The decree, in cause transferred from appellate court will not be affirmed merely because briefs and abstracts there filed were not also transferred.—Schmidt v. Barr, 165 N.E. 131, 333 Ill. 494, 65 A.L.R. 1.

(2) Where appeal was prayed and granted to appellate court in good faith, on its transfer to the supreme court, appellees were not entitled to a dismissal because the transcript did not reach the latter court within the time prescribed.—People v. Elitel, 83 N.E. 86, 231 Ill. 38.

In Louisiana

(1) Where an appealed case is transferred by order of a court of appeal to the supreme court, the failure of appellant to have the motion to transfer copied in the transcript furnishes no ground for the dismissal of the appeal as thus lodged in the supreme court, nor has the mover a standing to question the jurisdiction of the supreme court, although he may call attention, as the court itself may direct its attention, to such a lack of constitutional or legal power as should preclude it from further dealing with the case.—Succession of Huxan, 88 So. 687, 149 La. 61.

(2) Appeals transferred from courts of appeal to supreme court will not be dismissed for delay in filing of transcripts, where delay was not attributable to fault of appellants.—Mitcham v. Mitcham, 165 So. 635, 184 La. 111—De Bruys v. Burns, 81 So. 259, 144 La. 707.

(3) Transferred appeal will not be dismissed for failure to file transcript within designated time, where transcript was not forwarded to clerk of district court within such time through oversight of clerk of court of appeal.—Mitcham v. Mitcham, supra.

(4) In transferring appeals to supreme court, courts of appeal should order clerks to return record to clerk of district court as soon as order making transfer becomes final and immediately notify appellant, and should fix time limit for filing of transcript in supreme court after date on which record is received by district court clerk.—Mitcham v. Mitcham, supra.

(5) After return of record to clerk of district court upon transfer of appeal from court of appeal to supreme court, appellant has duty to file transcript in supreme court within time fixed by court of appeal or extensions thereof.—Mitcham v. Mitcham, supra.

In Missouri, on certiorari in the supreme court to decide whether a decision of a court of appeals is contrary to a previous ruling of the former, the opinion of the latter is properly made part of the record for the purpose of ascertaining what the court of appeals decided.—State ex rel. Byrne v. Ellison, 199 S.W. 403, quashing certiorari Byrne v. News Corp., 190 S.W. 933, 195 Mo.App. 265.

63. Conditions precedent

(1) Appellants, who appealed from adverse judgment to court of appeal, which transferred appeal to supreme court, were not required, as condition precedent to lodging appeal in supreme court, to pray for a rehearing in court of appeal, where they acquiesced in judgment of that court directing transfer of appeal.—Gilmore v. Lyon Lumber Co., 105 So. 85, 159 La. 18.

(2) A case transferred by the supreme court to the court of appeal in 1919 did not require an affidavit that the appeal had not been brought for the purpose of delay under Acts 1904 No. 56, as amended by Acts 1912 No. 19.—In re Aztec Land Co., 85 So. 634, 147 La. 672—De Bruys v. Burns, 81 So. 259, 144 La. 707.

Inches

Appeal would not be dismissed for laches in lodging appeal transferred from court of appeal in supreme court, where part of delay was caused by appellants' application for permission to file original record in lieu of transcript, and another part was attributable to illness of clerk and his deputy, delay of three weeks intervening between time transcript was expressed to appellants and time that it was filed not working by itself nor in connection with other delays a dismissal of appeal.—Gilmore v. Lyon Lumber Co., 105 So. 85, 159 La. 18.

In Georgia

(1) Where error was properly brought to October term, 1916, of supreme court, and, after ratification of constitutional amendment, see Acts 1916 p 19, relating to transfer of causes, argument was heard in supreme court on jurisdiction, and decision was reserved until March term, 1917, when it was ordered transferred to court of appeals and duly transmitted thereto and docketed for October term, 1917, after docket for March term, 1917, had been closed, court of appeals had until end of March term, 1917, in which to dispose of case.—Water Power & Mining Co. v. Arnold, 99 S.E. 382, 149 Ga. 107, affirming Arnold v. Water Power & Mining Co., 96 S.E. 343, 22 Ga.App. 504.

(2) Such constitutional amendment contemplates reception of a writ of error by court of appeals, whether in due course or by transmission from supreme court, and a writ of error to supreme court of which court of appeals, under the constitution, has jurisdiction, is not brought to court of appeals until supreme court has determined jurisdiction and ordered a transfer.—Water Power & Mining Co. v. Arnold, supra.

In Indiana, whether appellate court erred in refusing to issue special supersedeas directing trial judge to enter order keeping in force writ of attachment and attachment bond pending appeal cannot be considered by supreme court on petition to transfer to supreme court original action filed in appellate court.—*J. As in the case of transfers between courts of original jurisdiction, see supra § 511, a petition to transfer a cause from one appellate court to another should allege facts showing a right to such transfer under the statute.⁶⁵

Although neither party questions propriety of transfer from court of appeals, supreme court must determine jurisdiction before considering appeal on merits.—Hull v. McCracken, 39 S.W.2d 351, 327 Mo. 957, retransferring, App., 1 S.W.2d 205, to App., 53 S.W.2d 405.

Freehold involved

Appellate court must, of its own motion, order record of cause involving freehold transferred to supreme court.—Schmidt v. Barr, 159 N.E. 774, 328 Ill. 365.

Amount in controversy

(1) Where amount in controversy does not exceed two thousand dollars, the supreme court, under Const. 1921 art 7 § 10, must decline to entertain the appeal, although no motion has been made to dismiss it or to transfer it to the proper court.—Nelson v. Continental Asphalt & Petroleum Co., 102 So. 583, 157 La. 491.

(2) Where, in an action for personal injuries resulting in judgment for plaintiff for five hundred dollars, plaintiff, answering defendant's appeal, alleges the judgment should be increased to one thousand dollars, the appeal, on the motion of the supreme court, will be transferred to the court of appeal.—Mancuso v. Joseph Chalona Co., 93 So. 183, 145 La. 896.

(3) Where the amount involved in a case appealed to a court of intermediate appeal exceeded the jurisdiction of the court, it might, of its own accord, take notice that it had no jurisdiction, and the case would be removed to the court of last resort.—Bowles v. Examination of record

On petition to transfer from appellate court to supreme court, the supreme court will not examine the record to determine whether such facts exist.—Julian v. Bliss, 147 N.E. 148, 196 Ind. 68, denying petition 145 N.E. 442, 82 Ind.App. 597.—In re Aurora Gaslight, Coal & Coke Co., 115 N.E. 673, 186 Ind. 690.

a. In General

As a general rule, where a cause is properly transferred from one court to another, the former court is deprived of jurisdiction, and the latter has jurisdiction to proceed as though the cause had originally been instituted in the court.

Where an order of removal of a cause from one court to another is properly made, the former court is thereby divested of jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of the latter court attaches and the cause proceeds as if originally instituted there,⁶⁶ unless, by virtue of some statutory provision, a transfer of where the petition for such transfer does not allege that the amount really in controversy exceeds one thousand five hundred dollars, and where the appellee does not object to the jurisdiction of the superior court as specified by the act of May 5, 1899, P.L. p 248.—Hogsett v. Columbia Iron, etc., Co., 15 Pa.Super. 474.

Constitutional question involved

On a motion to transfer a cause from the court of appeals to the supreme court, on the ground that a constitutional question is involved, the specific articles or sections of the constitution claimed to have been violated must be distinctly indicated.—State v. Brownfield, Mo.App., 266 S.W. 143.

Decision contrary to ruling of supreme court

On certiorari in the supreme court to review a decision of a court of appeals as being contrary to a previous ruling of the former, the petition must allege what particular cases and rulings of the supreme court are involved.—State ex rel. Byrne v. Ellison, Mo., 199 S.W. 403, quashing certiorari Byrne v. News Corp., 190 S.W. 933, 195 Mo.App. 265.

Insufficient showing

Where showing of appellant in support of its application for a writ of supersedeas was insufficient to justify granting such application, appellant's petition for a transfer of the cause after decision by district court of appeal was denied by supreme court.—Kane v. Universal Film Exchanges, 91 P.2d 577, 32 Cal. App.2d 365, denying hearing 89 P.2d 683, 32 Cal.App.2d 365.

Powers and proceedings after transfer

(1) Where action pending in state court is removed to another state court, any attempted subsequent action therein by first tribunal is beyond its jurisdiction.—Ex parte City Bank & Trust Co., 76 So. 372, 200 Ala. 440.

(2) Proceedings taken in circuit court after issuance of order or removal by another circuit court in which action was pending, wherein attachment had been issued against property involved therein, were ineffective and judgment entered therein void.—Marcum v. Addison Branch Land Co., 95 S.W.2d 32, 264 Ky. 541.

(3) Where attachment proceedings were begun in county court and certified to district court under statute, district court had jurisdiction to consider and dismiss another creditors petition of intervention which county court had permitted to be filed.—Hartner v. Davis, 68 P.2d 456, 100 Colo. 464.

(4) Judgment of dismissal rendered by district court wherein suit was originally filed and the elapsing of more than thirty days without the filing of motion for a new trial did not deprive another district court of the same county of jurisdiction to try the case and render judgment therein, when at the time the judgment of dismissal was entered the case had been transferred to, and was in process of trial by, another district court of the county.—De Zavala v. Scanlan, Tex.Com.App., 65 S.W.2d 489, reversing on other grounds, Scanlan v. De Zavala, Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 849.

(5) Where action commenced in seventh district court of Smith County to try issue of invalidity of prior judgment entered in such court was transferred to special district court of such county, such court's failure to determine issue of invalidity was error, even if cause was properly transferred, since order of transfer clothed special district court with same power to determine validity of prior judgment as transferring court had.—Whitfield v. Atkinson, Tex.Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 804.

(6) Where case was transferred from one district court to another pending dissolution of former court, writ to stay execution on judgment was returnable to latter court.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Tabor, Tex.Civ.App., 291 S.W. 311.

(7) Where action against insurer for premiums paid on industrial policy was transferred from municipal court to surrogate's court for determination of interest of estate of insured on policy, surrogate's court was entitled to determine only whether proceeds belonged to estate, and after such determination to be without jurisdiction to decide conflicting claims between insurer and claimant.—In re Krasnofsky's Estate, 284 N.Y.S. 738, 157 Misc. 759.

(8) A final order, made in a cause or proceeding after it has been transferred under Or.L. § 939, providing that, where proceedings are commenced in the county court in which the county judge is a party or interested, they may be certified to the circuit court where actions at law shall be proceeded with as on appeal from the county to the circuit court, and, if the matter be in probate, then all original papers and proceedings shall be certified to the circuit court, is the judgment or decree of the circuit court, and any party may appeal therefrom to the supreme court.—In re Bethel's Estate, 209 P. 311, 111 Or. 178.

(9) Under statute providing that where case is sent from county court to circuit court because jury is demanded, the circuit court may determine the fees or compensation of attorneys or executors, where the county court has power to fix them, the circuit court did not have mandatory duty to fix such fees or compensation.—Kessler v. Olen, 280 N.W. 352, 228 Wis. 662, rehearing denied 281 N.W. 691, 228 Wis. 662.

After transfer between subordinate appellate courts

(1) Court of civil appeals will not consider motion overruled by another court of civil appeals before transfer of case.—Shipp Buick Co. v. Tolbert, Tex.Civ.App., 296 S.W. 329.

(2) Motion to affirm on certificate, made after transfer of case from another court of appeals will be overruled, where such other court overruled similar motion on same ground before transfer.—Smith v. Continental Supply Co., Tex.Civ.App., 283 S.W. 1082.

(3) Decision of court of civil appeals of another district permitting filing of transcript was not after transfer reexamined on motion to strike transcript.—Mauldin Drilling

Co. v. Weyman, Tex.Civ.App., 3 S.W. 2d 585, error dismissed.

After transfer between subordinate appellate court and court of last resort generally

(1) Where a cause appealed to a subordinate appellate court is transferred to the court of last resort, the latter court has jurisdiction to determine all questions to the same extent as if the appeal had been taken to it in the first instance.—Rankin v. Wyatt, 73 S.W.2d 764, 335 Mo. 628, 94 A.L.R. 941, transferred, see, App., 49 S.W.2d 243, overruling motion 48 S.W.2d 88—Alexander v. St. Louis-San Francisco Ry. Co., 38 S.W.2d 1023, 327 Mo. 1012, reversing on other grounds, App., 4 S.W.2d 838—Cash v. Sonken-Galamba Co., 17 S.W.2d 927, 322 Mo. 349—Block v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. of Baltimore, Md., 290 S.W. 429, 316 Mo. 278—Geninazza v. R. U. Leonori Auction & Storage Co., Mo., 252 S.W. 417, transferred, see Geninazzi v. Leonori, App., 233 S.W. 75—Robertson v. Robertson, 192 S.W. 988, 270 Mo. 137.

(2) If the subordinate appellate court has rendered a decision such division is vacated by the transfer and the matter stands as though no decision had been rendered.

Ind.—Riverside Coal Co. v. North Indianapolis Cradle Works, 142 N.E. 377, 194 Ind. 176, overruling rehearing 139 N.E. 674, 194 Ind. 176.

(3) Upon transfer of an appeal from the district court of appeal to the supreme court, opinion and decision of the district court of appeal become a nullity and of no force or effect, either as a judgment or as an authoritative statement of any principle of law therein discussed, unless approved or adopted by the supreme court.—Knouse v. Nimocks, 66 P.2d 438, 8 Cal.2d 482—In re Kent's Estate, 57 P.2d 901, 6 Cal.2d 154.

(4) The case is set at large for decision upon the entire record, and not limited to a decision of the questions affecting the parties who secured the transfer.—Martin v. Howe, supra.

(5) Question whether district court of appeal, at time of rendition of its opinion, was a legally constituted court, became moot upon order of transfer of cause to supreme court.—Van Tiger v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 60 P.2d 851, 7 Cal.2d 377—In re Kent's Estate, supra.

(6) Supreme court's practice of considering only opinion of district court of appeal, when passing on petitions for hearing is confined to cases not involving original jurisdiction of district court of appeal.—In re O'Connell, 250 P. 390, 199 Cal. 535, 48 A.L.R. 1232.

(7) Supreme court may treat application for reinstatement of attorney, after disbarment, when transferred to it from district court of appeal, as de novo proceeding.—In re O'Connell, supra.

(8) Court to which appeal is transferred has power to reexamine ruling of subordinate appellate court on motion to dismiss.—In re Stierlen's Estate, 248 P. 509, 199 Cal. 140.

(9) Where record on certiorari to court of appeals discloses that court of appeals erred in retaining jurisdiction of case, questions other than jurisdiction raised on certiorari will not be adjudicated, but case will be decided on original bill of exceptions and record after transfer thereof to supreme court.

GA.—Walton v. Gormley, 178 S.E. 152, 180 Ga. 90, reversing Gormley v. Walton, 170 S.E. 706, 47 Ga.App. 466, vacated 178 S.E. 398, 50 Ga. App. 478, transferred 180 S.E. 220, 180 Ga. 660.

IND.—Cushman v. Hussey, 118 N.E. 816, 187 Ind. 228.

(10) Where court of appeals transfers case to supreme court because constitutional questions are involved, supreme court's jurisdiction of appeal extends to all questions properly made by assignments of error.—Chattanooga Dayton Bus Line v. Burney, 23 S.W.2d 669, 160 Tenn. 294.

(11) District court of appeal may revise, correct, and modify opinion, to uphold judgment, after transfer of cause to supreme court.—In re Cate, Cal.App., 273 P. 617, supplementing 271 P. 356, which denied rehearing 270 P. 968.

(12) Where an appeal was determined on its merits by district court of appeal and supreme court denied petition for a hearing, the granting by the supreme court of a hearing after a decision of the district court of appeal denying respondent's motion to recall remittitur of district court of appeal on ground that fraud and imposition had been practiced did not transfer entire cause on its merits to the supreme court, but only motion to recall remittitur.—Heroux v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 93 P.2d 805, denying transfer, App., 86 P.2d 841, denying motion 82 P.2d 620, 28 Cal.App.2d 401, transferred to 94 P.2d 820.

(13) Where the judges of the court of appeals disagreed as to whether what purported to be a bill of exceptions in appellee's abstract of the record was properly authenticated, and the case was transferred to the supreme court, the supreme court has jurisdiction just as if the cause had come by appeal from the nisi prius court, and the appellants may within due time file a corrected abstract, thus eliminating all questions of the insufficiency of the original.—Williams v. Kansas City Terminal Ry. Co., 231 S.W. 954, 285 Mo. 11, transferred, see App., 223 S.W. 132.

(14) On transfer from appellate to supreme court, appellant has right to file corrected abstract in supreme court, if it is served and filed in time for latter hearing.—Rock Island Implement Co. v. Wally, Mo.App., 268 S.W. 804.

(15) Appellant is not limited, on transfer of case to supreme court, to assignments of error and points submitted in court of appeals.—Cash v. Sonken-Galamba Co., 17 S.W.2d 927, 322 Mo. 349.

(16) On transfer of cause from supreme court to court of appeals, questions raised in supreme court concerning time and notice of filing abstract of record were not before court of appeals where all were duly filed in court of appeals in due time.—Ashbrook v. Willis, 100 S.W.2d 943, 231 Mo.App. 460, transferred, see 89 S.W.2d 659, 338 Mo. 226.

(17) Where supreme court has declined jurisdiction of cause on ground that motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were not filed in contemplation of law, and has transferred cause to court of appeals, that court is confined to consideration of record proper.—State v. Rollinger, Mo.App., 267 S.W. 17, transferred, see Sup., 256 S.W. 460.

(18) In an action on tax bills issued by a municipality under and in strict pursuance to a local option act adopted by its qualified voters, where an appeal was taken to the supreme court, on a constitutional question, and that court declared that the question was improperly raised, and transferred the case to the court of appeals, the defense that no notice of the proposed tax was given will not be considered in the latter court, there being no provision in the act for such notice.—Chapman v. Adams, 243 S.W. 401, 210 Mo.App. 680, transferred, see Sup., 230 S.W. 39.

Conflicting decisions

Where a case is transferred to the supreme court by one of the courts of appeal for the reason that a judge believes the decision of that court in conflict with the decision of another court of appeals, it is the duty of the supreme court to hear and determine the cause as in case of jurisdiction obtained by ordinary appellate process; in other words, the question of conflict drops out of the case, under Const.Amendm.1884 § 6.—City of Brunswick ex rel. Barkwell v. Benecke, 233 S.W. 169, 289 Mo. 307.

Dissenting opinion

Where the only ground for reversal of judgment of the court of civil appeals presenting a question within the jurisdiction of the supreme court is a point of the admissibility of evidence as to which one judge of the court of civil appeals dissents, questions of the admissibility of other evidence, as to which all the members of the court of civil appeals were agreed, and of the insufficiency of the evidence to warrant the judgment, on which they were also agreed, being exclusively within the jurisdiction of such court.—Gatewood v. Fort Worth & D. C. Ry. Co., 232 S.W. 493, 111 Tex. 291, affirming Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Gatewood, Civ.App., 185 S.W. 932.

Title to land involved

(1) The court of appeals cannot render decree affecting title to realty in cause transferred thereto by supreme court after being revived in name of administratrix of deceased appellant's estate without making deceased's heirs parties thereto, as successors to his title are not in court.—De Hatre v. Ruenpohl, App., 123 S.W.2d 243, transferred, see 108 S.W.2d 357, 341 Mo. 749.

(2) Nor would the court of appeals render such a decree even if the successors to decedent's title were in court.—De Hatre v. Ruenpohl, supra.

(3) Nor would the court of appeals have power to render or direct decree affecting title to tracts of land as to which defendant in suit for establishment of constructive trust in realty and accounting of rents and profits collected therefrom disclaimed any title or interest by answer.—De Hatre v. Ruenpohl, supra.

(4) A judgment for defendant in suit for establishment of constructive trust in realty and accounting of rents and profits collected therefrom should not be construed as adjudging or affecting title to tracts as to which defendant disclaimed any title or interest by court of appeals, to which cause was transferred by supreme court after being revived in name of administratrix of deceased plaintiff's estate, where deceased's heirs are not in court and it was not claimed that defendant collected any rents or profits from such tracts, but plaintiff's reply alleged that he had been in possession thereof continu-

the cause has the effect of limiting the issues,⁶⁷ and all subsequent proceedings in the court to which the cause was transferred must conform to the practice and procedure of that court.⁶⁸ So, where a motion is made to dismiss an appeal to the supreme court of a state, and the court transfers the appeal to a subordinate appellate court, the motion to dismiss still pends and may be heard and determined by a latter court.⁶⁹

A subordinate appellate court will not determine questions relating to the brief or assignments of error where the cause must be transferred to a higher appellate court as involving title to land.⁷⁰

It is usually held that, where an order removing a cause has become final, a subsequent order by the same court, which has the effect of depriving

the court to which the case was removed of jurisdiction, is a mere nullity;⁷¹ but it has also been held that a court of general jurisdiction may revoke a certificate transferring questions to another court for trial where such certificate was made without notice to the adverse party of the application therefor,⁷² and that a subordinate appellate court may rescind an order transferring a cause of the court of last resort under a statute which had been declared void by the latter court.⁷³

The jurisdiction of the court to which a cause is transmitted may cease by reason of the failure of a party to the action to comply with an order of such court, as a result of which there is no issue to try.⁷⁴

ously for twenty years.—De Hatre v. Ruenpohl, supra.

(5) Where ejectment action was transferred from the supreme court on the ground that title to realty in the constitutional sense was not involved, defendant's right, if any, to the fee-simple title to the land in question could not be determined in the action or by the court of appeals.—Frederich v. Tobaben, Mo.App., 124 S.W.2d 593, transferred, see Sup., 117 S.W.2d 251.

(6) The only question the court of appeals need determine was whether plaintiffs were entitled to possession at time suit was filed and judgment rendered.—Friederich v. Tobaben, supra.

67. Forcible entry and detainer

(1) Defendant by pleading the general issue and filing a brief statement setting up title in himself, thus securing a removal of the cause from the municipal court to the superior court, waives other defenses, and, on report of case to the supreme court, the only issue is defendant's title.—Pomerleau v. Pomerleau, 124 A. 243, 123 Me. 522—15 C.J. p 1151 note 34 [a].

(2) Defendant, having waived all defenses other than her title, admits disseisin if she has no title.—Pomerleau v. Pomerleau, supra.

Transfer from probate to equity court

(1) Where a cause is removed from a probate court into a court of equity, proceeding had and rules and practice that prevail are the general jurisdiction and procedure of court of equity and powers conferred by law.—Hamilton v. James, 166 So. 425, 231 Ala. 668.

(2) The administration and settlement of a decedent's estate is a single and continuous proceeding, and there can be no splitting up of such administration, any more than any other cause of action; and, when the administration is once removed into a court of equity, its jurisdiction becomes exclusive, and it must operate to final and complete settlement, following its own action and governed by its own procedure.—McKeithen v. Rich, 86 So. 377, 204 Ala. 588.

Transfer from city court to surrogate's court

Where claim against decedent's estate for board and lodging furnished decedent was rejected, action was brought by claimant against executor, and claimant's objections to executor's account for improperly rejecting claim were overruled, executor's "proposed judgment" dismissing claimant's complaint cannot be signed nor could accompanying bill of costs be taxed after transfer of case to surrogate's court, since rights of parties must be expressed in decree, although "proposed judgment" would be proper in city court where action was commenced.—In re Baum's Estate, 277 N.Y.S. 900, 154 Misc. 371.

Transfer from surrogate's court to supreme court

Where the surrogate of Kings County filed a certificate of disqualification and the county judge as acting surrogate transferred the case to the supreme court at special term, under Surrogate's Court Act § 8, the surrogate's court became functus officio, and the supreme court acquired full jurisdiction to grant a jury trial at trial term, under Civ.Pract. Act § 429, and the provisions of Surrogate's Court Act § 68, authorizing the surrogate, in his discretion, to direct a jury trial of controverted questions of fact, are not applicable thereto.—In re Brooklyn Trust Co., 201 N.Y.S. 571, 121 Misc. 502.

Effect of higher court's failure to act on motion

Where the supreme court transferred an appeal to the court of appeals on the ground of its want of jurisdiction, the failure of the supreme court to act on a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground appellant's brief did not comply with the rules is not an implied holding that the brief was sufficient.—Kansas City Breweries Co. v. Markowitz, 221 S.W. 398, 203 Mo.App. 390, transferred, see Sup., 212 S.W. 849.

to the court of last resort was the raising of a constitutional question, that court loses jurisdiction where the party raising the question abandons it, and will transfer the appeal to a subordinate appellate court, which has jurisdiction to decide all the remaining questions.⁷⁵

The transfer to a subordinate court of a cause appealed to the court of last resort is a holding by the higher court that the subordinate court has jurisdiction of the appeal.⁷⁶ So, where the court of last resort determines that no constitutional question is involved and transfers the cause to a subordinate appellate court which has no power to decide constitutional questions, any such question is eliminated from the case,⁷⁷ and the transfer itself is in effect a determination by the higher court that no constitutional question was properly raised and presented.⁷⁸ In considering an appeal in a case transferred to a subordinate appellate court from the court of last resort, the subordinate court is controlled by the order of the transferring court.⁷⁹ The action of a subordinate appellate court in transferring a cause to the court of last resort is a holding that jurisdiction of the cause is in the higher court, and the assumption of jurisdiction by the latter court is an implied holding to the same effect.⁸⁰

(1) Where an appeal is transferred from the supreme court to the court of appeals because the amount in controversy is insufficient to give to supreme court jurisdiction, the determination as to such amount by the supreme court is binding on the court of appeals.—Vordick v. Vordick, 226 S.W. 59, 205 Mo.App. 555.

(2) The court of appeals is limited not only by such determination, but also by the constitution and statutes, to rendering a judgment for seven thousand five hundred dollars in addition to the amount of the circuit court judgment not in dispute.—Vordick v. Vordick, supra.

Title to realty not involved

(1) Where defendant argued the case on the theory that the title to real estate was involved in the proceeding, and it appeared that an appeal had been prosecuted to the supreme court, where the cause was transferred to the appellate court, it was to be assumed that if such contention had been correct the supreme court would have taken jurisdiction of the appeal.—McNeill v. Allen, 205 Ill.App. 199.

(2) On appeal to supreme court in ejectment action wherein defendant denied plaintiff's ownership and specifically alleged ownership in himself, transfer of cause to court of appeals on stipulation of parties on ground that supreme court was without jurisdiction implied finding that title to real estate was not directly involved.—Brown v. Wilson, Mo.App. 181 S.W.2d 848.

No franchise involved

Where an appeal from quo warranto proceedings was first taken to the supreme court on the theory that the case involved a franchise as well as an office, and was transferred to the appellate court, presumably on the theory that no franchise is involved, the sole question for the consideration of the latter court is whether it involves an office.—People v. Brady, 223 Ill.App. 95, affirmed 135 N.E. 87, 302 Ill. 576.

Determination that suit is at law

Supreme court's transfer of case to court of appeals determines proceeding is at law and not in equity.—Flanigan v. Hutchins, 146 S.E. 500, 39 Ga.App. 220—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Koehler, 137 S.E. 85, 36 Ga.App. 396, transferred 132 S.E. 64, 161 Ga. 934—Taylor Lumber Co. v. Clark Lumber Co., 127 S.E. 905, 23 Ga.App. 815—Stone v. Edwards, 124 S.E. 54, 32 Ga.App. 479—Smith v. It has further been held that the court, by transfer of a cause to the court of another county does not divest itself of jurisdiction to try other cases between different parties which had been begun before the complaint in the transferred cause was filed;⁸¹ that void proceedings in the wrong court are not validated by transferring the cause to the proper court;⁸² that a cause certified from the probate court to the circuit court retains its probate character;⁸³ that a judge of the municipal court of a district to which a cause has been transferred from another district in the same borough by the president justice of the municipal court acting as a judicial officer has no power to pass on the validity of the order of transfer;⁸⁴ that, in the absence of explicit statutory regulation, the court to which an action for possession of tenements has been transferred for a jury trial has authority so to regulate the travel of the cause in that court that there may be a speedy determination of the cause and that the rights of defendant may be protected;⁸⁵ that, where a subordinate appellate court erred in refusing to transfer a cause to the court of last resort, the latter court will decide the case on the original bill of exceptions and record after the subordinate court has transferred the same to it;⁸⁶ and that the court of last resort, on the transfer of disbarment proceedings from a subordinate appellate court, after a decision by the latter court, will accept such decision as a correct determination of issues of fact.⁸⁷

b. Imputed Notice of Transfer

The parties are bound to take notice of the transfer and subsequent proceedings.

Where a case has been transferred, the parties are bound to take notice of the transfer and subsequent proceedings.⁸⁸ So a defendant properly brought into court by citation is chargeable with notice of an order transferring the cause to another court on account of disqualification of the judge.⁸⁹

§ 518. — Pleadings

On transfer of a cause the pleadings remain the same unless an amendment is allowed or unless the statute permits the filing of further pleas.

Where a case is transferred after joinder of issue, the pleadings remain the same unless an amendment is allowed⁹⁰ or unless the statute permits the filing of further pleas.⁹¹

Equitable issues tendered by a substituted petition after the cause reaches the court to which it is transferred are within the jurisdiction of that court.⁹²

§ 519. — Improper Transfer

The court to which a cause is improperly transferred acquires no jurisdiction, but error in transferring a cause from one division of a court to another division has been held a mere irregularity. Irregularity in the transfer may be waived, or a party may be estopped to deny jurisdiction. A court may correct its own erroneous transfer.

It has been held that, in case it appears that a cause has been transferred erroneously from one court to another, the one to which it has been so transferred acquires no jurisdiction,⁹³ and should

Amendment allowable

Superior court to which action of tort for damages for waste was removed from district court could allow amendment to include claim for recovery of premises for waste, since superior court had as extensive jurisdiction of case as if case were first instituted in that court.—Thayer v. Shorey, 191 N.E. 435, 287 Mass. 76, 94 A.L.R. 307.

General issue as part of record, although no such plea filed

Under Gen.L. c 237 § 3, Judiciary Act c 17, where, in trespass, there is an entry of appearance by defendant in the district court, and the case is certified to the common pleas division on a claim for jury trial, the plea of the general issue is deemed a part of the record, and defendant

Burden of proof

Where action commenced in seventh district court of Smith County was transferred to special district court of such county, interveners who were successful in their cross action had burden to show affirmatively that special district court had strike the cause from the docket;⁹⁴ but there is also authority for the view that any error in transferring a cause from one division of a court to another is a mere irregularity not fatal to the jurisdiction.⁹⁵

A cause which is transferred from a subordinate appellate court to the court of last resort on the wrongful assumption that it involves a constitutional question will be retained by the latter court, if the cause should have been appealed to it in the first instance as involving title to an office.⁹⁶

Irregularities in the transfer of a cause may be waived by the parties,⁹⁷ and when so waived any judgment rendered by the court to which the transfer was made, within its jurisdiction, is valid.⁹⁸ A party who goes to trial in the court to which a transfer is made waives any objection to the propriety of such transfer,⁹⁹ and such waiver may also result from other conduct inconsistent with an intention to insist upon the impropriety.¹ A party may also be estopped to deny that the court to which the case is transferred has jurisdiction

A court may correct its own erroneous transfer of a cause to another court,³ provided a motion therefor is timely made;⁴ and, where an order of transfer is void, jurisdiction remains in the court in which the action was brought,⁵ and the exercise of such jurisdiction may be presumed without the issuance or service of new process.⁶

Improper transfer of a cause from one court to another as ground for retransferring or remanding the cause to the court which transferred it is discussed infra § 520.

§ 520. — Retransfer and Remanding

A cause improperly transferred may in some cases be retransferred to the court from which it came, and under some circumstances the judgment rendered in the court to which a transfer is made will be certified back to the original court for enforcement.

In some jurisdictions a case improperly transferred may be retransferred or remanded to the court from whence it came,⁷ and it has been held jurisdiction to try such cause.—Whitfield v. Atkinson, Tex.Civ.App., 106 S.W.2d 804.

Grounds for setting aside order

Where case was appealed to supreme court because it involved a federal question, and that court on its motion transferred case to Springfield court of civil appeals, if supreme court transferred case on the sole question of amount involved, without noticing federal question, defendant's remedy was by motion in the supreme court to have it set aside order of transfer.—*Armstrong v. Revival of jurisdiction

Where city court of a county transferred case to superior court of newly created county under Civ.Code 1910 § 829, after the case had been twice tried in such city court, and where superior court of new county dismissed the case from its docket, neither judgment constituted a dismissal of the case, but judgment of such city court merely suspended jurisdiction of such court pending action of superior court of the county, so that the case should be tried as one pending in the city court with jurisdiction in such court revived from the day of judgment of dismissal in superior court, in view of § 4644 subd 4.—Subers v. Hirschensohn, 127 S.E. 825, 33 Ga.App. 752.

Grounds for retransfer

(1) Circuit court properly retransferred unlawful detainer case to municipal court, where defendant's petition for removal to circuit court omitted jurisdictional averments regarding defendant's entry upon land.—Ex parte Lockhart, 140 So. 762, 224 Ala. 517.

(2) Where supreme court, which granted petition for hearing after decision by district court of appeal refusing to recall its remittitur, determined that denial of motion by district court of appeal was regular, supreme court would not rule on the motion or dismiss the same, but would transfer it to district court of appeal.—Heroux v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., Cal., 93 P.2d 805, denying transfer, App. 86 P.2d 841, denying motion 82 P.2d 620, 28 Cal.App.2d 401, transferred, see 94 P.2d 820, that, where a cause was transferred from a lower appellate court to the court of last resort on the motion of defendant in error, and a motion to remand was made, of which motion he had due notice, and he failed to enter any appearance in the court of last resort, the motion would be granted and the cause remanded as of course, with costs to plaintiff in error, without considering the question of jurisdiction.⁸ Where a motion to remand a case transferred from the court of last resort to a lower appellate court is abandoned, the case is left for the determination of the latter court.⁹ A case which has been properly transferred cannot be sent back,¹⁰ and the court to which a cause has been removed should not send it back because it does not appear from the transcript of the record that it was transferred according to law.¹¹ Where an appellate court other than the court of last resort decides a case and then transfers it to the court of last resort, and the latter court retransfers it for want of jurisdiction, the decision made by the other appellate court stands, and its only remaining jurisdiction is to enforce the judgment by proper mandate.¹² Where a court of last resort transferred a cause to a subordinate appellate court on the ground that no constitutional question was involved, and the subordinate court reversed the judgment of the trial court, but transferred the cause back to the higher appellate court because deeming its opinion in conflict with other decisions of the subordinate appellate court, the higher court reheard and determined the cause as if it had obtained jurisdiction by ordinary appellate process.¹³ Where a cause was transferred to the court of last resort by a lower appellate court on the ground that constitutional questions were involved, the overruling of a motion to retransfer the cause to the lower appellate court does not relieve the court of last resort from the duty to determine its jurisdiction when called on to exercise it on final hearing.¹⁴

Certifying judgment back for enforcement. Under some statutes a suit against the banking commissioner on a claim against an insolvent bank may be transferred to a coördinate court of the same county for trial, without transferring the entire liquidation proceedings, and the judgment rendered in such suit should be certified back to the transferring court for enforcement.¹⁵

§ 521. Effect of Refusal of Transfer

The overruling of a petition to transfer an appeal from a lower appellate court to the court of last resort is an approval of the legal principles announced by the lower appellate court, but not an approval of all its reasoning. An order of the court of last resort denying a motion to transfer an appeal to a lower appellate court for want of jurisdiction does not preclude a subsequent transfer on that ground.

Where a petition is made to transfer an appeal from a lower appellate court to the court of last resort, a ruling of the latter court denying the petition is in effect an approval of the statement of legal principles by the lower appellate court as announced by the court of last resort,¹⁶ but it cannot be regarded as an approval of all that

(3) Since the law has placed upon the district court of appeal the duty to investigate applications for admission to practice, the supreme court on transfer of the case will not conduct the investigation, but will retransfer the matter.—In re Wells, 163 P. 657, 174 Cal. 467.

(4) Forcible entry and detainer action should be dismissed from docket of superior court and returned to court from which it was transferred to be disposed of in accordance with law, where defendant had failed to file recognizance as required by statute prior to transfer.—Haskell v. Young, 184 A. 394, 134 Me. 221.

(5) Where appeal from conviction of crime to supreme court on ground constitutional question was involved was transferred to the court of appeals, because there was no bill of exceptions in the transcript, and permission is granted in the court of appeals to file original bill of exceptions, which bill raises the constitutional question, the case will be retransferred to the supreme court.—State v. Graham, Mo.App., 250 S.W.

925, retransferred, see 256 S.W. 770, 301 Mo. 273.

Discretion of court

Under statute regarding transfer of causes between superior and district courts where cause has been transferred from one court to another on motion of party, neither party is entitled to have cause retransferred as matter of right, but courts have discretionary right to retransfer cause.—Acme Oil & Gas Co. v. Cooper, 33 P.2d 191, 168 Okl. 346.

In Indiana there is no statutory authority for retransfer of a cause which has been transferred from one court to another, unless it be a provision for transfers because of disparity between the number of cases pending in the two courts.—Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Peck, 88 N.E. 627, 44 Ind.App. 62, transferred, see 87 N.E. 644, 172 Ind. 19.

was said by the lower appellate court in argument as to what the law might be.¹⁷ In other words, the denial of the petition is an approval of the lower tribunal's conclusion, but not necessarily an approval of all its reasoning.¹⁸ An order of the court of last resort overruling a motion to transfer an appeal to a subordinate appellate court for want of jurisdiction is not res judicata precluding a subsequent transfer where the want of jurisdiction is discovered.¹⁹

B. STATE COURTS AND UNITED STATES COURTS

§ 522. Independent Tribunals

Generally speaking, although state and federal courts form a part of a single system of jurisprudence, they are independent tribunals.

The courts of the United States and the courts of the various states are independent of each other,²⁰ except as judgments of state courts are subject to review by the federal supreme court, as indicated in the C.J.S. title Federal Courts §§ 238-271, also 25 C.J. p 924 note 61-p 946 note 6, or as actions originally brought in a state court may be removed to a federal court, under the rules considered in the C.J.S. title Removal of Causes § 1 et seq, also 54 C.J. p 200 et seq. So ordinarily the pendency of a suit in a federal court is not a bar to a suit in a state court involving the same controversy, and vice versa.²¹ However, the two courts are not foreign to each other; they form one system of jurisprudence, which constitutes the law of the land, and should be considered as courts of the same country, having jurisdiction partly different and partly concurrent,²² and as a matter of comity one of such courts will not ordinarily determine a controversy of which another of such courts has previously obtained jurisdiction, as is shown infra § 529.

§ 523. Exclusive Jurisdiction

With respect to each other, exclusive jurisdiction of state and federal courts is considered infra §§ 524, 525. Exclusive jurisdiction of courts in general see supra § 486 et seq.

§ 524. — State Courts

State courts have exclusive jurisdiction over matters not falling within the jurisdiction of federal courts.

State courts have exclusive jurisdiction over matters not falling within the jurisdiction of federal courts.²³ Such matters include: The domes-

Matters not necessary to decision

Where malpractice action was brought by infant by guardian ad litem, and not by infant's father or mother, alleged error in opinion of the district court of appeal concerning running of limitations against action by father or mother was not necessary to the decision, and did not affect the soundness of the conclusion reached by the district court of appeal.—Scott v. McPheeters, 93 P.2d 562, 33 Cal.App.2d 629, denying hearing 92 P.2d 678, 33 Cal.App.2d 629.

However, in denying petition for hearing of case wherein a municipality was a defendant, the supreme court withheld approval of portion of opinion of district court of appeal holding that the defense of ultra vires is not available to a municipality unless pleaded.—General Petroleum Corporation of California v. City of Los Angeles, 72 P.2d 551, 22 Cal.App.2d 332, denying hearing 70 P.2d 998, 22 Cal.App.2d 332.

Corpus Juris has been cited for the proposition that the construction placed by the supreme court of the United States upon an act of congress is binding alike upon state and federal courts.—Winton v. Thompson, Tex.Civ.App., 123 S.W.2d 951, 952.

Constitutionality of National Industrial Recovery Act is not for the express provisions of § 256 of the Judicial Code, as amended, defining the cases and proceedings wherein the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction,³⁹ such courts have jurisdiction to the exclusion of state courts of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, as is indicated in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law §§ 16, 131, also 16 C.J. p 62 note 37—p 63 note 50, p 160 note 84—p 162 note 17; of all suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under the laws of the United States;⁴⁰ of civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, as considered in Admiralty §§ 5-65; of all cases arising under the patent right, or copyright laws of the United States, as is shown below; of all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy, as is shown in Bankruptcy § 29; and of all suits and proceedings against ambassadors, or other public ministers, or their domestics, or domestic servants, or against consuls or vice consuls.⁴¹ Federal courts have also been granted exclusive jurisdiction over cases or prescribed kinds of cases arising under particular laws of the United States,⁴² including the anti-trust laws,⁴³ the Trading with the Enemy Act,⁴⁴ the Railway Labor Act,⁴⁵ and other enactments considered below in this section. However, the jurisdiction of a state court over an action not arising under such laws is not defeated by the fact that rights existing under such laws may be incidentally involved, as is shown above in § 526.

The supreme court of the United States has exclusive final jurisdiction over the subject of the effect to be given in each state to the records and judgments of courts of sister states,⁴⁶ and over disputes between states as to boundary lines.⁴⁷

Action for damages

(1) The state courts cannot entertain an action to recover damages for an infringement of a patent.—Denise v. Swett, 37 N.E. 627, 142 N.Y. 602, reversing 22 N.Y.S. 950, 68 Hun 188.

(2) Defendant debtor's claim against another for damages for established patent infringement was not subject to garnishment issued out of state court, since suit for such damages is a "suit arising under patent laws" and "suit brought for infringement of letters patent" over which federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction.—German v. Universal Oil Products Co., D.C.Mo., 6 F.Supp. 53.

Action for breach of contract not to infringe on article manufactured involved primarily validity and infringement of patent, and was not within state court's jurisdiction.—Model Brassiere Co. v. Maiden Form Brassiere Co., 248 N.Y.S. 185, 139 Misc. 694.

(3) Whether defendants violated that part of agreement not to infringe certain letters patent was a question for federal courts alone, and state court had no jurisdiction to enjoin violation of such part of agreement.—Comerma Co. v. Comerma, 169 N.Y.S. 884, 182 App.Div. 576, affirmed 122 N.E. 878, 225 N.Y. 676.

53. Minn.—Grob v. Continental Mach. Specialties, 283 N.W. 774, 204 Minn. 459.

Conspiracy to steal

The state courts had no jurisdiction of action to recover damages for alleged conspiracy by defendants to steal plaintiffs' claimed inventions, where no patent had been issued to any of the parties, and interference proceedings were still pending before the patent office.—Grob v. Continental Mach. Specialties, supra.

Interference with ownership

Federal court has exclusive jurisdiction of suit to enjoin defendants' claim to plaintiff's patent and interference with plaintiff in asserting rights thereunder.—Egan v. Stitt, Tex.Civ.App., 297 S.W. 290.

Interstate commerce. Regulation of interstate commerce is exclusive in the federal courts, except where their jurisdiction in this regard is restricted by congress.⁵⁶ In so far as congress has so provided, federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of suits arising under the Shipping Act, as amended,⁵⁷ and the Interstate Commerce Act as amended,⁵⁸ including actions assailing the validity of rules, regulations, or orders made by or filed with the interstate commerce commission, or asking that they be restrained, annulled, or set aside.⁵⁹

United States property and territory. Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of suits brought by the United States to quiet title to lands,⁶⁰ and state courts are without jurisdiction to ascertain and abate alleged nuisances created by canals, dams, and levies constructed by the United States in aid of navigation,⁶¹ and cannot interfere with the primary disposition of the soil by the general government.⁶²

If the United States acquires territory by convention with another sovereign power, it has authority to enact laws for the protection and determination of property rights of the inhabitants of such territory in accordance with the terms of such treaty, and such laws, affecting title to real property within a state, must be construed by the United States courts.⁶³ Likewise, while there is also authority to the contrary,⁶⁴ it has been held that, if property is ceded by a state to the federal government, the state court has no jurisdiction over it,⁶⁵ unless it is otherwise provided in the act of cession.⁶⁶

State courts have no jurisdiction over the proprietary title of the United States to land within the state,⁶⁷ although, in case of controversy between two persons seeking to obtain title to government lands, a state court may protect the possession of the one appearing to have the better right until the controversy is settled by federal authority.⁶⁸

Suits against United States, its representatives, and agencies. In the absence of congressional sanction, state courts cannot entertain suits against the United States⁶⁹ or its agencies,⁷⁰ including corporations created by the national government,⁷¹ and are without jurisdiction to control or restrain the official conduct of federal officers or agents,⁷² federal courts having exclusive jurisdiction over such suits.

Actions on bonds. Under the Judicial Code, federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of an action on a bond given for the return of a vessel seized for a violation of the prohibition law.⁷³ Also, under an act of congress so providing, such courts have exclusive jurisdiction over actions on statutory bonds executed by persons contracting for the construction or repair of public buildings or public works;⁷⁴ but federal courts do not have exclusive jurisdiction over actions which, although involving such bonds, are not of the character specified in the statute.⁷⁵

§ 526. Concurrent Jurisdiction

State courts, when authorized by state law, have concurrent jurisdiction with federal courts to enforce rights secured by the constitution and laws of the United States, in so far as congress has not expressly or impliedly vested the federal courts with exclusive jurisdiction.

Concurrent jurisdiction in federal and state courts to enforce rights granted by federal law is not uncommon,⁷⁶ and may exist even without an express grant.⁷⁷ Generally, whenever a legal right arises and the state court is competent to administer justice, the right may be asserted in such court, although the federal court may have concurrent jurisdiction, unless the jurisdiction is limited by law to the federal courts, or unless the state courts are expressly or by necessary implication excluded by statute.⁷⁸ So, where congress has the right to take over exclusive jurisdiction, and has not covered the particular subject under consideration, the power of the state courts is upheld until congress acts.⁷⁹ In accordance with these principles it has been held that state courts have jurisdiction of suits relating to public lands;⁸⁰ of actions connected with bankruptcy, as indicated in the title Bankruptcy § 29; of actions involving insolvency, and assignments for benefit of creditors, in cases where the jurisdiction of the federal courts is not exclusive;⁸¹ of an action to recover duties, where there is no act of congress to the contrary;⁸² of a mandamus action to compel the acceptance of sureties for removal of a cause to the circuit court;⁸³ of suits for the enforcement of police regulations relating to navigation;⁸⁴ of actions involving obstruction of navigable waters;⁸⁵ of an action for a collision between a vessel and a bridge;⁸⁶ and of cases relating to maritime contracts or liens.⁸⁷

Federal courts, subject to limitations imposed by the federal law, may have concurrent jurisdiction with state courts over actions arising under state law.⁸⁸ Accordingly, where there is diversity of citizenship and the jurisdictional amount is involved, or where other basis for assuming jurisdiction under the federal law exists, federal courts have jurisdiction of actions under the workmen's compensation statutes of some states;⁸⁹ of actions for the foreclosure of liens, under the statutes of other states;⁹⁰ of actions for the recovery of state taxes paid;⁹¹ and of certain matters connected with probate and administration,⁹² such as the preservation of assets of the estate, pending administration in a state court of competent probate jurisdiction, when they are shown to be in danger of waste or dissipation,⁹³ or the adjudication of claims of creditors or next of kin or heirs to share in the estate.⁹⁴ Likewise, federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the state courts over an action to recover premises, the title to which was acquired from the United States,⁹⁵ in certain matters of assignments for the benefit of creditors or of insolvency,⁹⁶ and in all cases of fraud, excepting fraud in obtaining a will of real and personal estate;⁹⁷ and the blending of legal and equitable remedies in a state statute will not affect the ancient equitable jurisdiction of federal courts.⁹⁸ However, the concurrent jurisdiction of the national government with that of the states, which it has in the exercise of its powers of sovereignty in every part of the United States, is distinct from that exclusive jurisdiction which it has by the constitution in the District of Columbia.⁹⁹

The federal courts are the most appropriate forum in which to test the constitutionality of legislation by congress, even though the state courts have concurrent jurisdiction.¹ Likewise federal statutes should be interpreted by federal rather than state courts,² although, in the absence of a petition for removal, state courts possess the same power in this respect as do the federal courts.³

Under federal constitution and statutes. Upon the state courts, equally with the courts of the Union, rests the obligation to guard and enforce every right secured by the constitution and laws of the United States whenever those rights are involved in any suit or proceedings before them;⁴ and, where

Creditor's bill to sell real estate

Under state statute which vests the courts of equity with coordinate jurisdiction with the orphans' courts to order a sale of real estate of a decedent, where the personal estate is insufficient to pay debts, a federal court of equity may entertain a bill by a creditor whose status entitles him to invoke its jurisdiction for the enforcement of his claim and those of other creditors against the real estate of a decedent, on an allegation of insolvency of the estate, and may appoint a receiver for such real estate.—Perkins v. Federal courts do not have exclusive jurisdiction of controversies exclusive jurisdiction has not been expressly or impliedly granted to the federal courts, state courts have concurrent jurisdiction to enforce such rights,⁵ provided they are authorized by the state constitution and statutes to take jurisdiction.⁶

As a general rule, the grant of jurisdiction to federal courts does not of itself imply that the jurisdiction is to be exclusive.⁷ So, where a right of action, given by a statute of the United States, is in advancement of a common-law right, exist-arising under constitution.—Taylor v. De Hart, D.C.Mo., 22 F.2d 206, dismissed 47 S.Ct. 767, 274 U.S. 726, 71 L.Ed. 1335.

Federal court not divested of jurisdiction

Concurrent remedy in state court does not divest federal court of jurisdiction in case involving federal constitution.—Gamage v. Masonic Cemetery Ass'n, D.C.Cal., 31 F.2d 308, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., Masonic Cemetery Ass'n v. Gamage, 38 F.2d 950, 71 A.L.R. 1027, certiorari denied Gamage v. Masonic Cemetery Ass'n, 51 S.Ct. 30, 232 U.S. 852, 75 L.Ed. 755.

Compelling payment of sum due under federal statute

State court's jurisdiction in mandamus to compel county officers to pay state sum due under federal statute was not incompatible with federal courts' jurisdiction.—State v. Siegmund, 266 P. 1075, 125 Or. 197, certiorari denied State of Oregon ex rel. Van Winkle v. Siegmund, 49 S.Ct. 12, 278 U.S. 608, 73 L.Ed. 534.

Limitation by state

The state, by provisions in its Constitution or by appropriate legislation, may limit the jurisdiction of the courts so that they may not take cognizance of actions brought under a federal statute.—U. S. v. Sirianni, supra.

Personal injury action by railway postal clerk against railroad was held within jurisdiction of state court, as against contention that action rested on construction and enforcement of laws of congress, as to which state court was unauthorized by the constitution and laws of the state.—Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Stephens, 157 N.E. 58, 86 Ind.App. 251.

7. U.S.—U. S. v. Bank of New York & Trust Co., N.Y., 56 S.Ct. 343, 296 U.S. 463, 80 L.Ed. 331, affirmed, C.C.A., 77 F.2d 866, affirming, D.C., 10 F.Supp. 269, certiorari granted 56 S.Ct. 111, 296 U.S. 538, 80 L.Ed. 393—U. S. v. President and Directors of Manhattan Co., N.Y., 56 S.Ct. 343, 296 U.S. 463, 80 L.Ed. 331, affirming, C.C.A., 77 F.2d 881, affirming, D.C., 10 F.Supp. 269, certiorari granted 56 S.Ct. 111, 296 U.S. 558, 80 L.Ed. 393—U. S. v. Pink, 56 S.Ct. 343, 296 U.S. 463, 80 L.Ed. 331, affirming, C.C.A., U. S. v. Van Schaick, 77 F.2d 880, certiorari granted 56 S.Ct. 111, 296 U.S. 558, 80 L.Ed. 393.

Provisions of judicial code defining jurisdiction of federal district courts authorize plaintiff falling within its terms to institute suit in federal court, but do not divest state court of jurisdiction.—Columbian Nat. Life Ins. Co. v. Cross, Mass., 9 N.E.2d 402.

Effect of federal labor legislation

Federal legislation establishing the national labor relations board and conferring on that board certain powers respecting labor disputes did not take jurisdiction away from state court in action between labor unions over possession of the hiring hall maintained at certain port for longshoremen, and hence state court's order, finding individual guilt of contempt of court for criticizing decision in that action and threatening certain conduct if decision should be attempted to be enforced, was not invalid on ground that court had no jurisdiction.—Bridges v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, Cal., 94 P.2d 983.

ing independently of the legislation of congress in pursuance of the powers delegated by the constitution of the United States, the concurrent jurisdiction of the state courts is not taken away.⁸ Also, where the state courts have long enjoyed jurisdiction over the subject matter of an action, jurisdiction is not withdrawn by federal statute unless such an intention is distinctly manifested.⁹ However, mere reservation of partially concurrent jurisdiction to state courts by an act of congress conferring an otherwise exclusive jurisdiction on national courts cannot create substantive rights or obligations or indicate assent to their creation by the states.¹⁰

State courts, in accordance with these rules, except in so far as they are unauthorized under state law and except as exclusive jurisdiction has been vested in the federal courts, have jurisdiction of cases involving or arising under federal statutes, such as the Employers' Liability Act,¹¹ the Agricultural Adjustment Act,¹² the National Industrial Recovery Act,¹³ the National Prohibition Act,¹⁴ the Duty of court to take jurisdiction.

(1) The employers' liability act does not purport to require state courts to entertain suits arising under it, but only empowers them to do so. There is nothing in the act that purports to force a duty upon such courts as against an otherwise valid excuse.—McKnett v. St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co., 54 S.Ct. 690, 292 U.S. 230, 78 L.Ed. 1227, reversing 149 So. 822, 227 Ala. 349, certiorari granted 54 S.Ct. 210, 290 U.S. 621, 78 L.Ed. 542, motion denied 54 S.Ct. 439, rehearing denied 54 S.Ct. 855, 292 U.S. 613, 78 L.Ed. 1472—Douglas v. Co. v. Cochran, C.C.A.Ky., 56 F.2d 1019.

(2) Likewise, this act indicates no intent to prohibit an equity court of a state from regulating the conduct of its citizens when suing under such act in another state by injunction, to prevent hardship, oppression, or fraud, where such power existed prior to the act.—Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. McGinley, 185 N.W. 218, 175 Wis. 565.

(3) However, it is the duty of a state court to exercise jurisdiction of a cause arising under such act, when its jurisdiction as prescribed by local law is appropriate for the occasion and is properly invoked.

Land granted to state in trust

The reservation by congress in granting certain lands to a state in trust, of the right of the attorney general of the United States to institute suit in the United States courts to enforce the provisions of the trust, does not deprive the state courts of jurisdiction to compel the performance by state officers of the duties imposed on them by state statute for the performance of the trust; and since there is nothing in the language of the Enabling Act of June 20, 1910, § 23, conferring exclusive jurisdiction on federal courts to enforce such trust, or to prevent its breach, state courts have concurrent jurisdiction of any actions or proceedings arising out of the administration thereof.—Boyce v. Pima County, supra.

Homestead claims

When an entryman has complied with the laws of the United States relative to taking possession of unsurveyed and unappropriated public lands as a homestead, and has performed acts in settlement thereon, the state courts will protect him in his possession as though he had initiated his rights under the state law. Ariz.—Wamble v. Evans, 203 P. 554, 23 Ariz. 307.

Cal.—Fuller v. Fuller, 169 P. 369, 176 Cal. 637.

Establishment of trust as to mining claim

Secretary of interior, by granting lease to assignee of locators of mining claim pursuant to a federal statute, did not deprive state court of jurisdiction to determine suit to establish trust as to locator's profits.—

17. Pa.—Miller v. Reading Co., 140 A. 618, 202 Pa. 44.

Effect of state legislation

Workmen's Compensation Act did not oust state courts' jurisdiction of actions under Federal Safety Appliance Act.—Miller v. Reading Co., supra.

18. U.S.—Guterman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 48 F.2d 851.

Action for accounting

State court had jurisdiction of action brought by stockholder against railroad corporation and directors thereof to compel accounting for losses growing out of violations of Clayton Act and Sherman Anti-Trust Law.—Hand v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., D.C.N.Y., 55 F.2d 712—Guterman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., D.C.N.Y., 48 F.2d 851.

Defenses

(1) In suit to rescind contract, wherein defendant filed counterclaim for amount due thereunder, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to maintain defense that contract was invalid under the Sherman and Clayton Acts, where illegality of contract was alleged in reply as defense to counterclaim and plaintiff sought no affirmative advantage by reason of such statutes.—Remington Rand v. International Business Mach. Corporation, 3 N.Y.S.2d 515, 167 Misc. 108.

(2) However, there is authority to the effect that the determination of issues arising under the federal anti-trust laws, whether raised by way of attack or defense, rests exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal courts.—General Talking Pictures Corporation v. De Marce, 279 N.W. 750, 203 Minn. 28.

Action to restrain combination in restraint of trade was not within exclusive jurisdiction of federal courts where evil alleged did not affect interstate commerce so as to come within the scope of the Sherman and Clayton Acts.—Dothan Oil Mill Co. v. Espy, 127 So. 178, 220 Ala. 605.

No federal question

On demurrer to bill by labor union to restrain interference with contract with employer granting right to use union stamp and requiring employment of union members, such contract did not involve federal question under Sherman Anti-Trust Law.—Goyette v. C. V. Watson Co., 140 N.E. 285, 245 Mass. 577.

Jurisdiction of state courts

(1) County court had jurisdiction to determine who were heirs to land, although alien property custodian had taken possession thereof under the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended.—Miller v. Clausen, supra.

(2) A deceased alien enemy's funds or securities in bank's possession are within surrogate court's jurisdiction and may be made subject of provision in decree settling accounts of executor of his will for repayment to United States attorney general as successor of alien property custodian, by whom they were paid or delivered to estate and deceased's widow pursuant to previous attorney general's orders.—In re Sielcken's Estate, 3 N.Y.S.2d 793, 167 Misc. 327.

courts over suits by the United States is not exclusive,²⁴ and the jurisdiction of a state court, where appropriate to the occasion, may be invoked, in conformity to local laws, by a federal agent, agency, or instrumentality, when permission by congress has been expressly or impliedly given.²⁵ Similarly, state courts have jurisdiction of a suit against a federal officer,²⁶ agent,²⁷ or agency,²⁸ except where exclusive jurisdiction is given the federal courts. Furthermore, even where federal courts have been given exclusive control over claims against a particular officer or agent by act of congress, state courts are not necessarily deprived of jurisdiction over actions indirectly involving a claim against such person,²⁹ and the jurisdiction of the federal courts is not exclusive, under a charter of a cor-

Working under government contract

State court is not deprived of jurisdiction of personal injury action because parties were engaged in work under contract with the United States government.—Ohio River Contract Co. v. Gordon, Ky., 37 S.Ct. 599, 244 U.S. 68, 61 L.Ed. 997.

15 C.J. p 1157 note 6, p 1158 note 16.

Officer of national guard

In time of peace state courts have jurisdiction of a proceeding against an officer in the national guard to require him to discharge a member thereof, since, under the National Defense Act, as amended, the national guard is only a potential part of the United States army, and not in fact a part thereof until congress has made requisite declaration of existence of emergency.—Blanco v. Austin, 197 N.Y.S. 328, 204 App.Div. 34.

27. U.S.—Davis v. George B. Newton Coal Co., 45 S.Ct. 305, 267 U.S. 392, 69 L.Ed. 617, affirming George B. Newton Coal Co. v. Davis, 126 A. 192, 281 Pa. 74.

Director general of railroads

(1) Where director general, pursuant to orders of fuel administrator under Lever Act, seized coal during transportation from seller to buyer, and paid seller the contract price therefor under Transportation Act, action was maintainable in a state court against him for the difference between such contract price and the market price at the time of taking.—Davis v. George B. Newton Coal Co., supra.

(2) Under Federal Control Act of 1918 and Transportation Act of 1920, and presidential proclamation of April 11, 1918, state courts had jurisdiction of action against director general to recover overcharges on intra-state shipments. — Gorham Bros. Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 200 N.W. 287, 228 Mich. 273.

Federal court receivers

(2) Action against corporation which assumed liabilities of federal receiver after his discharge, was properly brought in state court.—

Bremer v. Chicago & E. I. Ry. Co., 247 Ill.App. 406.

28. Mich.—Burr v. Heffner, 286 N. W. 169, 289 Mich. 91.

Federal Housing Administration

Where statute creating Federal Housing Administration authorized administrator in his official capacity to "sue and be sued" in any court of competent jurisdiction, Federal Housing Administration through its state director was subject to be sued as garnishee defendant in state court.—Burr v. Heffner, supra.

Emergency Fleet Corporation

(1) It has been held that congress has authorized the bringing of suits against the Emergency Fleet Corporation in state courts.

U.S.—Sloan Shipyard Corporation v. United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, Wash., 42 S.Ct. 386, 258 U.S. 549, 66 L.Ed. 762—Atlantic Corporation v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, D.C.N.H., 286 F. 222.

Exclusive jurisdiction see supra § 525.

Under interstate commerce act

(1) State courts are not without jurisdiction in every case involving rights or questions under the interstate commerce act.—Detroit, M. &

St. L. Ry. v. City of Monroe, D.C. Mich., 262 F. 177.

(2) It is the expressed public policy of the federal government, not only not to restrict the jurisdiction of state courts in the enforcement of the interstate commerce act, but on the contrary to encourage resort to such jurisdiction.—State ex rel. and to Use of St. Louis B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 251 S.W. 383, 298 Mo. 474, certiorari granted State of Missouri ex rel. St. Louis, B. & M. Ry. Co. v. Taylor, 44 S.Ct. 132, 263 U.S. 696, 68 L.Ed. 511, affirmed 45 S.Ct. 47, 266 U.S. 200, 69 L.Ed. 247, 43 A.L.R. 232.

Federal motor carrier act does not deprive state courts of all general and concurrent jurisdiction of matters arising under both federal and state laws. It does not deprive state courts of jurisdiction of suit by motor carrier to set aside order of railroad commission granting competitor certificate of convenience and necessity to operate motorbus service and to enjoin him from operating and commission from permitting him to operate under such certificate.—Southwestern Greyhound Lines v. Railroad Commission of Texas, 99 S.W.2d 263, 128 Tex. 560, 109 A.L.R. 1235, reversing Railroad Commission of Texas v. Southwestern Greyhound Lines, Civ.App., 92 S.W.2d 296.

Review of action of state commission

State court's power to review action of public service commission in fixing rates is not exercised to exclusion of federal courts.—International Ry. Co. v. Prendergast, D.C.N.Y., 29 F.2d 296.

Injunction against increase of intra-state rates

State court has jurisdiction of suit to enjoin express companies from putting into effect special tariffs increasing intra-state rates, although answer sets up a justification order of interstate commerce commission, where from allegations it is apparent order did not apply.—American Exp. Co. v. State of South Dakota ex rel. Caldwell, 37 S.Ct. 656, 244 U.S. 617, 61 L.Ed. 1352, modifying State v. American Express Co., 161 N.W. 132, 38 S.D. 227.

Where award made by commission

Under Interstate Commerce Act § 16, when an award of damages for charging an improper rate has been made by the interstate commerce commission, but such order has not been complied with by the carrier, the shipper may institute suit either in the federal or state court.—Petition of Southern Lumber & Mfg. Co., 210 S.W. 639, 141 Tenn. 325.

Interstate shipment not involved

Mere condition in carrier's tariffs that rates charged should apply only on shipments for manufacture, where finished product was to be shipped out over defendant's railroad, claimed to be authorized by Comp.L.1915 § 8119, as to transit rates, did not render shipments interstate and deprive state courts of jurisdiction of action for overcharges, under Comp.L.1915 § 8117, final destination of shipments being unknown.—Gorham Bros. Tex.—Southland Sweet Potato Curing & Storage Ass'n v. Beck, Civ. App., 221 S.W. 656.

Action for unfair competition in circulating statements among plaintiffs' customers asserting that he was infringing patent, was within jurisdiction of state court, although it might be necessary to determine incidentally validity of defendants' patent.—Zenie v. Miskend, 284 N.Y.S. 63, 245 App.Div. 634, affirmed 1 N.E.2d 367, 270 N.Y. 636.

Counterclaim for damages for slander of defendant's property by plaintiff's false statements to persons at the trial that the articles manufactured by defendant infringed patents owned by plaintiff states a case arising in tort, and not under the patent laws, although it may indirectly involve a question arising under the patent laws as to the validity and scope of the patent, and such counterclaim is within the jurisdiction of the state court.—Han-

Accordingly, state courts have jurisdiction of actions on contracts relating to patents,⁴⁵ of actions to determine title to patents,⁴⁶ or to determine property rights in allegedly patentable devices,⁴⁷ and of actions to prevent or repair breaches of fiduciary relationship as to inventions or trade secrets,⁴⁸ although questions arising under the patent laws may be incidentally involved.

Copyright and literary property. State courts have jurisdiction of actions which do not arise under the copyright laws, in which a copyright is in-centally involved.⁴⁹ Accordingly state courts have jurisdiction of an action on a contract relating to copyrighted matter;⁵⁰ of an action to determine the title to a copyright;⁵¹ or of an action to restrain a combination to control the price of copyrighted books, although the issue may require the court to construe the rights of the parties under the copyright law.⁵² Likewise, where the complaint asserts no rights under the copyright laws, an answer pleading a defense based on the copyright laws does not oust the state court of jurisdiction.⁵³

53. N.C.—Landis Christmas Sav.

State courts also have jurisdiction of suits relating to literary property and the prevention of wrongs connected therewith,⁵⁴ and the copyright laws have not taken away or affected their jurisdiction over the common-law right of an author in his unpublished works.⁵⁵ In fact, state courts have exclusive jurisdiction of actions or suits concerning common-law intellectual property,⁵⁶ and of contracts relating thereto,⁵⁷ except where the requisite diversity of citizenship exists to give a concurrent jurisdiction to the federal courts.⁵⁸ Under a statute which provides that it shall not be construed to annul or limit the right of the author or proprietor of an unpublished work, at common-law or in equity, to prevent the copying, publication, or use of such unpublished work without his consent and to obtain damages therefor, the statutory remedy has been held to be cumulative to that given by the common law, and the jurisdiction of state and federal courts in such cases is concurrent.⁵⁹ A picture is not a manuscript within the meaning of the statute.⁶⁰

Trademarks, trade names, and unfair competition. State courts have jurisdiction of suits to restrain the infringement of a trademark,⁶¹ and of actions for unfair competition.⁶²

Penalties and forfeitures. If an act of congress gives a penalty to a party aggrieved, without specifying a remedy for its enforcement, it may be enforced by a proper action in a state court, in the absence of an act of congress providing otherwise.⁶³

However, such jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon a state court by act of congress.⁶⁴

Cases affecting ambassadors, ministers, and consuls. The provision of the federal constitution giving United States courts jurisdiction in all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls does not exclude the jurisdiction of state courts, and acts of congress enacted pursuant thereto, including § 256 of the Judicial Code, do not purport to exclude state courts from jurisdiction except where they grant it to federal courts.⁶⁵ Also, such provisions are to be interpreted in the light of the tacit assumptions upon which it is reasonable to suppose that the language was used.⁶⁶ Accordingly, the state courts are not thereby deprived of jurisdiction of proceedings involving the domestic relations of such persons,⁶⁷ including divorce⁶⁸ and filiation proceedings.⁶⁹

Actions by or against nonresident or alien parties. State courts have been held to have jurisdiction of an action by a foreign sovereign against a citizen of the state,⁷⁰ as well as an action by another state, to restrain the transfer, in the state where the suit is brought, of negotiable securities issued by the former state;⁷¹ and a nonresident may bring an action in a state court although on account of his residence in another state he might have brought the suit in the first instance in a federal court.⁷² Also, state courts have been held to have jurisdiction of a suit brought by a state against citizens of other states;⁷³ over a bill filed

Suit for injunction and accounting. Action to restrain publication and sale by defendants of a song which plaintiff claimed all rights to under assignment from one of the defendants, and for an accounting of the profits and income derived therefrom, was within supreme court's jurisdiction, such an action being one to enforce common-law rights, and not an action under the United States copyright statutes.—*Kortlander v. by a citizen of the state against a citizen of another state to compel the performance of a contract of sale of land within the former state;⁷⁴ and over controversies between citizens and aliens.⁷⁵ Furthermore, where the right sought to be enforced against a nonresident arises solely under an act of congress, it may nevertheless be enforced in the state court by attachment, unless some federal policy is thereby violated or some federal right secured to the nonresident is impaired.⁷⁶

Actions on bonds. State courts have jurisdiction of an action on a bond given by the collector of customs, for the delivery of certain property seized or forfeited to the United States, the facts being conceded in the bond,⁷⁷ and of actions on bonds or undertakings given in a federal court.⁷⁸ Federal courts, on the other hand, may have jurisdiction of actions on bonds given in state courts.⁷⁹ Exclusive jurisdiction of actions on bonds see supra § 525.

§ 527. — Election of Tribunal

Where state and federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction over a particular cause, the plaintiff is entitled to elect his forum; but having done so he is bound thereby.

Williams*, D.C.Mass., 9 F.2d 165, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 12 F.2d 773, certiorari denied Williams v. General Outdoor Advertising Co., 47 S.Ct. 111, 273 U.S. 721, 71 L.Ed. 858.

Where state and federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction over a particular cause, plaintiff is entitled to elect his forum,⁸⁰ and a grant of concurrent jurisdiction to such courts implies that in the first instance plaintiff shall have the choice of the court, and incidentally whatever remedial advantage inheres therein.⁸¹ This right is a valuable one and may not be arbitrarily denied.⁸²

A party who invokes the jurisdiction of either of such courts, where they have concurrent jurisdiction, is bound by his election, and cannot thereafter bring an action in the other tribunal,⁸³ unless the later suit involves questions which cannot be considered in the earlier.⁸⁴

In case the relief sought is in the main identical, the state court may require the parties to elect between suits in both federal and state courts, although there are parties in the suit in the federal court who are not parties in the state court.⁸⁵

§ 528. — Comity

The doctrine of comity applies to prevent unseemly conflicts between state and federal courts where they have concurrent jurisdiction.

Nonresident plaintiff has right to pursue in federal court all of his remedies against defendant and it makes no difference what his motive may be in electing to invoke federal jurisdiction.—Sies v. Johnson, C.C.A. Mich., 86 F.2d 766.

Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as a federal corporation having the right to bring suit for enforcement of constitutional individual liability of stockholders for debts of bank in either state or federal court, had right to elect forum.—Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Central Republic Trust Co., D.C.Ill., 11 F.Supp. 976.

After termination of administrative proceedings

Where a party is required to exhaust all administrative remedies before resorting to the courts, his right to elect either a state or federal court for the enforcement of his cause of action begins as soon as the administrative stage of action is completed.—Nelson v. Co. v. Youngquist, supra.

85. N.J.—New Jersey Cent. R. Co. v. New Jersey West Line R. Co., 32 N.J.Eq. 67.

Comity between federal and state courts is necessary to prevent scandal from unseemly conflicts of jurisdiction and to promote a decent and orderly administration of justice.⁸⁶ While the rule of comity between such courts is one of sound public policy and should be applied in a spirit of liberality, its application must depend somewhat on the circumstances.⁸⁷ In applying the rule, federal courts refuse to extend their jurisdiction over matters equally cognizable by state tribunals, unless the elements of that jurisdiction are so clearly present that the principle of comity has no place in the matter,⁸⁸ and plaintiffs will be left to their remedy in the state court, where a temporary injunction is sought in the federal court merely as ancillary to such remedy and a decree rendered in the former court makes the acts sought to be enjoined a contempt if done.⁸⁹ There is also a rule of comity against rendering a decree that may practically destroy the effect of a supersedeas, and under this rule it is the duty of a state court to preserve an entire fund, pending an appeal or writ of error to the state court, where others in the United States supreme court are also claiming payment out of such fund.⁹⁰ However, comity between a state and a federal court should not preclude the determination of a cause by the latter, where it has jurisdiction thereof and can speedily hear the same and give the desired relief, and such cause is one of great moment to the parties and the public.⁹¹ In other words, the rule of comity does not go to the extent of relieving federal courts from the duty of proceeding promptly to enforce rights asserted under the federal constitution,⁹² and all considerations of comity must give way to the duty of a federal court to accord a citizen of the United States his right to invoke the court's powers and process in the defense or enforcement of his rights.⁹³ In fact it has been stated authoritatively that the federal court, if properly appealed to, cannot decline, on the ground of discretion or comity, to take jurisdiction of a suit to the cognizance of which its powers extend,⁹⁴ although there is authority to the effect that the exercise of jurisdiction by a federal court becomes one of discretion, where the only reason why it should not take cognizance of a cause rests on the ground of comity.⁹⁵ Also, the rule of comity does not deprive the federal court of jurisdiction as against a plea of possession as receivers under an order of the state court, and that the accounting prayed for had been made and the subject matter adjudicated,⁹⁶ and judicial comity does not require a federal court to allow the use of pleadings and papers in a pending suit by a state court which has assumed jurisdiction of the same controversy.⁹⁷

Bondholder not being party to proceedings in state court, which ordered issuance of mandamus to compel drainage district commissioners to transmit lists of lands for assessment, could seek federal injunction restraining commissioners from transmitting such lists, and decree granting such injunction was not objectionable as disregarding rule of comity, especially since state court suspended issuance of mandamus and further proceedings until federal court's decision.—Everglades Drainage Dist. v. jurisdiction, the court which first acquires jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties has a right to retain, maintain, and exercise it, to the exclusion of the other court, until the final disposition of the controversy; and the other court may not so exercise its jurisdiction as to defeat, impair, or interfere with the jurisdiction of the first court.

Where a state and a federal court have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties or privies and the same subject matter, the tribunal where jurisdiction first attaches retains it exclusively, and will be left to determine the controversy and to fully perform and exhaust its jurisdiction and to decide every issue or question properly arising in the case.⁹⁸ This jurisdiction continues until the judgment rendered in the first action is satisfied⁹⁹ and extends to proceedings which are ancillary or incidental to the action first brought.¹ Accordingly, where the jurisdiction of a state or a federal court has once attached, it is not, and cannot be, taken away, arrested, diminished, disturbed, or interfered with by proceedings subsequently instituted in the other court,² especially where the suit in the latter

Unexercised jurisdiction of another tribunal

(1) The fact that other courts, or a state public service commission, have likewise jurisdiction of the subject matter of a suit, affords no ground for a United States district court to refuse to grant the relief prayed, if no other tribunal has as yet exercised its jurisdiction.—Carpenter Steel Co. v. Metropolitan-Edison Co., D.C.Pa., 270 F. 255.

Basis of doctrine
(1) Doctrine that earlier court's jurisdiction in suits involving custody over res is exclusive rests on requisite that jurisdiction in suits in rem depends on actual possession of res or power at any time to assume it.—In re Putnam, C.C.A.N.Y., 55 F.2d 73, reversing, D.C., The Alcione, 50 F.2d 186, and certiorari denied Putnam v. Christie, 52 S.Ct. 641, 286 U.S. 558, 76 L.Ed. 1292.
(2) The noninterference principle is based on a possible future need for possession of specific property by the court which has first undertaken a jurisdiction of such nature that in the course of the proceedings possession by the court, through its officer, may become necessary.—Hinkley v. Art Students' League of New York, C.C.A.Md., 37 F.2d 225, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct. 247, 281 U.S. 733, 74 L.Ed. 1149, affirming, D.C., Art Students' League of New York v. Hinkley, 31 F.2d 469.

Suit to quiet title is within the application of the rule, it being, under statute, in the nature of a suit in rem.

Quo warranto proceeding against corporation is closely analogous to a proceeding in rem and, from the time it is instituted in a state court, the jurisdiction of that court is exclusive and superior to that of a federal court in which a suit in equity is subsequently instituted for the appointment of a receiver and an injunction against the continued prosecution of pending suits.—Lillard v. Lonergan, C.C.A.Kan., 72 F.2d 865, certiorari denied Lonergan v. Lillard, 55 S.Ct. 147, 293 U.S. 615, 79 L.Ed. 704.

Scope of jurisdiction retained

(1) Court first acquiring jurisdiction of res may retain it for all purposes.—York v. Acadia Land Co., D.C.La., 58 F.2d 1042.

(2) State court first acquiring jurisdiction of property in litigation, must be permitted to exhaust remedy before federal court interferes; it is vested, while holding possession of property involved, with power to determine all controversies relating thereto.—Insurance Finance Corporation v. Phoenix Securities Corporation, D.C.Idaho, 42 F.2d 933.

Custodial decrees

Where, in creditor's foreclosure suit state court entered decree directing receiver to return properties to owner, which was ordered to operate them, suit was in rem, decree was custodial, and federal court could not appoint receiver for same properties.—Arn v. Operators' Royal-its jurisdiction as to defeat, frustrate, impair, or interfere with the jurisdiction first acquired.¹¹ In such cases, the court whose jurisdiction and process are first invoked by the filing of a bill or complaint has the prior right, as constructive possession exists and jurisdiction attaches at that time, at least where process subsequently issues in due course, regardless of whether or not that court is the first actually to seize the property or to take physical possession thereof.¹² On the other hand,

Determination of title and obligations under decree

A court, which has had possession of property and has, through its officers sold it, can retain jurisdiction over, and constructive possession of, the property after delivering actual possession thereof to the purchaser, for the purpose of determining any issue which may subsequently arise in connection with the nature and extent of the title acquired under the decree of sale, or of determining what liens or demands the purchaser, by reason of his purchase, has become obligated to discharge.—*Price v. Surrender of res

(1) Under rules of comity, the court in which an action was last begun will surrender possession of the res, where action was first begun in another court and possession of the res was essential to judgment.—Ward v. Foulkrod, C.C.A.Pa., 264 F. 627, affirming D.C., Wheeler v. Badenhause, 260 F. 991.

(2) Receivers appointed by federal court subsequent to receivership in state court will be required to surrender property involved to state court receivers.—Lee v. Edmunds, C.C.A.Fla., 66 F.2d 122.

Judgment or decree entitling party to interfere

Where res has come into possession and under control of state court, person having right to go into federal court cannot obtain judgment or decree entitling him to interfere with administration of res by court having its possession.—*Pufahl v. Drawing possession to court

(1) An action in rem draws to the court possession or control, actual or potential, of the res.—Kline v. Burke Const. Co., Ark., 43 S.Ct. 79, 260 U.S. 226, 67 L.Ed. 226, 24 A.L.R. 1077, reversing, C.C.A., Burke Const. Co. v. Kline, 271 F. 605.

(2) Filing action in state court to have securities distributed and issuance of summons drew to that court possession of res.—Insurance Finance Corporation v. Phoenix Securi-

where the jurisdiction of the two courts is not the same or concurrent, and the subject matter in litigation in one is not within the cognizance of the other, or there is no constructive possession of the property in dispute by the filing of a bill, it is the date of actual possession that determines priority of jurisdiction.¹³ The difficulty in applying these rules is in determining whether the conflicting jurisdictions are actually concurrent and the same.¹⁴ Another doubtful question may be whether a bill is of such a character that its filing is the taking of constructive possession of the property.¹⁵

b. Limitations of Rules

Due to limitations on its application and operation, the rule that as between a state and a federal court the one first acquiring jurisdiction may retain it without interference from the other may not be effective, in a particular case, to prevent or invalidate the judicial act, step, or proceeding in question.

Frequently, the rule that as between a state and federal court having concurrent jurisdiction the one first acquiring jurisdiction is entitled to retain it without interference by the other is not applicable or effective so as to prevent or nullify a particular judicial act, step, or proceeding.¹⁶ There is, of course, no reason or occasion for the application of the rule where there is no conflict of jurisdiction,¹⁷ or the exercise of jurisdiction by one court does not defeat, impair, or interfere with the pre-ties Corporation, D.C.Idaho, 42 F.2d 933.

Potential possession

Mere appointment of receiver in federal court with right to take possession of property was insufficient to give federal court prior jurisdiction over state court theretofore rendering judgment on which execution had issued and was in the hands of the sheriff; the state court had potential possession which was sufficient to give it priority of jurisdiction.—C. T. C. Investment Co. v. Daniel Boone Coal Corporation, D.C.Ky., 58 F.2d 305.

Filing of bill and service of order or rule to show cause are sufficient to confer prior and exclusive jurisdiction over the trust fund or other property involved.

N.J.—Ætna Casualty & Surety Co. v. International Re-Insurance Corporation, 169 A. 113, 114 N.J.Eq. 516.

Issuance of ad interim injunction

After the court has acquired jurisdiction under Code Civ.Proc. § 416, by issuing ad interim injunction, although summons has not been served, and has not lost that jurisdiction, it can appoint a receiver and exercise complete control over the assets of defendant, notwithstanding an intervening appointment of a receiver by the federal court.—City of New York v. Ariz.—Forst v. Intermountain Building & Loan Ass'n, 65 P.2d 1379, 49 Ariz. 246.

Different issues and relief

Of two courts having concurrent jurisdiction of actions involving different issues and seeking different relief, but affecting the same res, that court which first gained actual possession of the res will retain jurisdiction thereafter, though action was first brought in the other court.—Vard v. Foulkrod, C.C.A.Pa., 264 F. 627, affirming, D.C. Wheeler v. Badenhausen Co., 260 F. 991.

Relief asked after institution of suit

Where a suit filed in the federal court was in personam and the original bill alleged no grounds for the appointment of a receiver and did not pray for that relief, and subsequently a suit in rem was filed in a state court and a receiver appointed on the same day, custody and possession of the property involved then passed into the state court and the federal court was without jurisdiction thereafter, on application for the appointment of a receiver, to oust the possession of the state court by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise.—Terrell v. Where due recognition of subordination of federal receivership or possession of federal receiver to proviously acquired jurisdiction of another court,¹⁸ or disturb, or interfere with, the possession of property by such other court or its officer.¹⁹ Ordinarily the rule is considered applicable only where the parties to, the subject matter of, and the relief sought in the two suits are the same, so that if the first suit had already been disposed of the judgment therein should be treated in bar as a former adjudication;²⁰ but where, although the proceedings in the two courts are not the same, they are closely related and there is fraud or sharp practice by a party in delaying the state court until the federal court can act and inducing the federal court to act without a full disclosure of prior proceedings, the federal court, on learning the method by which its jurisdiction has been invoked, should, as a matter of comity and good faith, deny to the guilty party the further use of its jurisdiction until after the state court has been given an opportunity to exercise the jurisdiction it is entitled to exercise.²¹ It is also held that the exclusive jurisdiction of the court in which suit is first brought does not include all matters which may possibly become involved or arise in the suit, but extends only to questions which properly and ordinarily arise in the progress of the first suit;²² and, where a statute makes the jurisdiction of the federal court exclusive in special proceedings, it is limited to determining matters material to, and directly connected with, the judgment sought to be obtained, and does not necessarily extend to other questions growing out of the subject matter as between different parties to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of other competent courts.²³ Furthermore, it is held that the rule does not apply where: The subject matter is located in different states, in the respective territorial jurisdictions of which the suits are brought;²⁴ the proceedings in the first court are ceeding or receivership in a state court is accorded, there is no breach of comity.—Harris v. Gurley, C.C.A. Tex., 80 F.2d 744—Fred T. Ley & Co. v. Wheat, C.C.A. Fla., 64 F.2d 257.

Large assets in one state

Federal court in Arizona did not abuse discretion in appointing re-sham or collusive or a mere evasion of jurisdiction;²⁵ or the proceedings in such court, as in case of assignees filing an account, cannot be considered as a suit.²⁶ The issuance of the summons in a suit in equity wrongly begun on the law side does not give the federal court jurisdiction as against a state court in which the suit was begun between the issuance of the summons and the filing of the complaint.²⁷

The general rule under consideration is not applicable where, although an action in a state court is first instituted, exclusive authority is given a federal court,²⁸ as where, on the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, the jurisdiction of the federal court becomes exclusive within the authority of the Bankruptcy Act, see Bankruptcy § 29 a, or where a limitation of liability proceeding assumes such form that only a federal court is competent to afford relief.²⁹ Likewise, federal jurisdiction, although first attaching, must be relinquished to the state where the matter involved is peculiarly within the province and duty of the state and its officers or courts.³⁰

The rules of comity must give way to constitutional rights; and where, notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal to a state court from an order of a state commission fixing or refusing to change utility rates, a supersedeas pending appeal has been refused and the rates are alleged to be confiscatory, the utility is entitled to apply to a federal court for relief.³¹

Both the general rule under consideration and the similar rule dealing with suits in rem or quasi in rem, are applicable only where both actions deal either actually or potentially with specific property or objects, and not where either or both actions are in personam, it being permissible in the latter instance for both actions, although involving the same issues, to proceed concurrently until a judgment is rendered in one which becomes res judicata in the other.³² In determining whether the rules are applicable, the line of distinction between proceedings in personam and those in rem is not to be drawn with academic nicety; the question is one of practical regard for the orderly and efficient administration of justice.³³

After termination, by dismissal or otherwise, of litigation in one court, or after the release of property in the possession of the court or its officer, any exclusive jurisdiction or freedom from interference which it may have possessed is at an end; and another court may, in a proper case, deal with the property or subject matter which, by the former suit, was not withdrawn forever from subsequent litigation.³⁴

A state court's priority of jurisdiction may be waived and abandoned by acquiescence and long delay,³⁵ and plaintiff in the second suit, having selected the forum, cannot complain that defendant asserts his defense there.³⁶

As between a state and a federal court, the mere pendency of a suit in one court does not exclude the jurisdiction of the other court over another suit subsequently instituted therein,³⁷ it not being a bar to the subsequent suit, as shown supra § 522, nor a ground for the abatement thereof, as noted in Abatement and Revival § 67. The usual practice is for the court in which the second action is brought not to dismiss such action, but to suspend proceedings therein until the first action is tried and determined,³⁸ and in a few cases the federal courts have declined even to stay proceedings until the determination of an action between the same parties for the same cause previously commenced in a state court, basing such refusal on a lack of power.³⁹ The question may be one, not of the existence of jurisdiction, but of the propriety of exercising it by disposing of the case.⁴⁰ Again, jurisdiction of the court having priority may be exclusive only so far as to render the decision of the other court subordinate thereto, without regard to which judgment or decree is first rendered.⁴¹

Prior proceeding in probate court. The exclusive jurisdiction of a probate court or court exercising probate jurisdiction over the administration of the estate of a decedent, does not prevent a federal court, where jurisdictional requisites exist, from entertaining and proceeding with a suit to construe a will, establish rights, adjudicate the validity and amount of a claim, enforce a personal liability of an executor or administrator, or obtain any other adjudication, judgment, or relief which does not interfere with the administration of the estate by the probate court or disturb that court's control and possession of property.⁴² This is especially true where the controversy in the second suit falls within a field in which the probate court has no power to act.⁴³

Where part of the estate of a decedent is situated in the District of Columbia and part in a state, the fact that a court of one jurisdiction has, as to property within its borders, granted letters of administration or entertained an action to construe a will does not prevent a court of the other jurisdiction from doing likewise, as to property within its territorial limits.⁴⁴

By injunction, a court asserts its jurisdiction over property involved, over the res, and vests itself with exclusive right to control and administer it, and when thus taken into

Necessity for seizure under legal process

That vessel allegedly seized because of use in unlawful fishing had been seized by the Washington director of fisheries did not place vessel in "custody of the law" so as to justify proceeding in rem in state court for forfeiture of vessel, since, to be in "custodia legis," property must be taken by legal process. Also, the attachment by United States marshal of libeled vessel did not necessarily give federal court exclusive jurisdiction, where attachment was not under authority of the revenue law.—The Bessie Mac, D.C.Wash., 21 F.Supp. 220.

Possession of trustee appointed by court

Where national bank receiver consented to state court's appointment of successor trustee for mortgage pool trust of which bank had been trustee, federal court properly exercised jurisdiction of receiver's suit to obtain adjudication of his rights in pool, as against contention that suit would unnecessarily interfere with control of res in state court's custody and that under rules of comity federal court should have dismissed suit.—*Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Appointment of receiver by state court

An order of state court directing state insurance commissioner to take possession of business and property of insurance corporation and enjoining others from taking possession was unauthorized, where federal district court had first acquired jurisdiction to liquidate corporation's property by prior filing of receivership suit and had issued injunction against interference. The state court, having appointed receiver for corporation after federal court, in prior proceeding, had acquired jurisdiction over corporation's property, should give receiver directions for surrender of property and may make suitable orders permitting him to take possession and proceed with liquidation when federal court surrenders its jurisdiction; and by confirming his right to liquidate insurance corporation after federal court had acquired jurisdiction, state court conferred on commissioner requisite authority to apply to federal court to relinquish its jurisdiction in favor of state administration.—Penn General Casualty Co. v. (1) Receiver appointed by federal court had no authority to direct sheriff, theretofore levying on property under state court judgment, to return execution.—Chicago Trust Co. v. Daniel Boone Coal Corporation, D.C.Ky., 58 F.2d 302.

(2) Neither federal court nor receiver had right to interfere with levy on execution issued pursuant to judgment theretofore rendered in state court, and judgment creditors are entitled to relief as against receiver wrongfully interfering with sheriff in levy of execution on judgment theretofore rendered by state court.—Newberry v. Davison Chemical Co., C.C.A.N.C., 65 F.2d 724, certiorari denied 54 S.Ct. 75, 290 U.S. 660, 78 L.Ed. 571, two cases—C. T. C. Investment Co. v. Daniel Boone Coal Corporation, D.C.Ky., 58 F.2d 305.

(3) An order of federal court appointing receiver is not subject to modification with respect to delivery of property to receiver, since it did not interfere with the sheriff with respect to possession or levy of ex-

process from a federal court cannot be replevied in a state court,⁶² although it has also been held that a state court may entertain replevin in such case where the federal court consents,⁶³ where the property seized is that of a third person,⁶⁴ and where the value of the property is below the limit of the jurisdiction of the federal court.⁶⁵ Likewise, where the state court has exceeded its execution.—Chicago Trust Co. v. Daniel Boone Coal Corporation, supra.

(4) As between court having exclusive jurisdiction of property and court whose receiver took wrongful possession, former alone can decide whether latter's receiver should be reimbursed from property for expenditures.—Speakman v. Bryan, C.C.A.Ga., 61 F.2d 430.

Property in possession of state official

(1) Where property in the hands of a state superintendent of insurance, or a commissioner of banking and insurance, is regarded as in custodia legis, federal courts will not interfere.—U. S. v. Bank of New York & Trust Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 77 F.2d 866, affirming, D.C., 10 F.Supp. 269, certiorari granted 56 S.Ct. 111, 296 U.S. 558, 80 L.Ed. 393, affirmed 56 S.Ct. 343, 296 U.S. 463, 80 L.Ed. 331, and affirmed, C.C.A., U. S. v. President and Directors of Manhattan, 77 F.2d 881—Jacoby v. Bond & Mortgage Guarantee Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 72 F.2d 420, certiorari denied 55 S.Ct. 216, 293 U.S. 619, 79 L.Ed. 707—Fulla v. Warranty Building & Loan Ass'n of Newark, N. J., D.C.N.Y., 5 F.Supp. 952.

(2) However, where such officer is regarded as an officer of the executive department of the state his custody is not regarded as excluding the jurisdiction of the federal courts.—Farrell v. Stoddard, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.2d 802—Acken v. New York Title & Mortgage Co., D.C.N.Y., 9 F.Supp. 521.

Property in hands of executor or administrator

(1) Federal courts have no power of disposition of funds in probate courts of state.—Watkins v. Madison County Trust & Deposit Co., D.C.N.Y., 40 F.2d 91—Tussing v. Central Trust Co., D.C.Mich., 34 F.2d 312—Perkins v. Warburton, D.C.Md., 4 F.2d 742.

(2) An administrator appointed by a state court is an officer of that court and takes possession of decedent's property in obedience to orders of the court and his possession is the court's possession and cannot be disturbed by any other court.—Wells v. Helms, C.C.A.Okla., 105 F.2d 402—Kahl v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., D.C.Ill., 299 F. 793.

(3) In suit against executor in federal court, on decree directing accounting for trust property commingled by executor's testator with his own funds, execution should not in first instance issue while administration in state court is pending.

—Alexander v. Fidelity Trust Co., Pa., 249 F. 1, 161 C.C.A. 61.

(4) Although administrators are acting under temporary letters, which might have been issued by clerk, but were issued by ordinary, they are nevertheless officers of the court of ordinary, and contrary claim, as a basis for the federal court taking jurisdiction of a suit involving the estate, cannot be supported, as where a petition for administration of an estate was filed with the court of ordinary, such court, although not in actual possession of the estate, is entitled to possession, and has such jurisdiction over the administration proceedings that the federal court cannot entertain bill involving estate on the theory that no administration was pending. Further, since equity cannot take jurisdiction over an estate to prevent waste and dissipation, unless the administration is vacant and the danger of loss imminent, where administration was pending the federal court cannot take jurisdiction, nor could it appoint a receiver on the theory that the administration was vacant, because temporary administrators appointed pursuant to Georgia practice had no power to carry on decedent's business; and where temporary administrators had given sufficient bond, and a number of them were persons of property, a receiver cannot be appointed by the federal court on the ground of waste or dissipation of assets, although administrators were claimed to have exceeded their authority.—Smith v. Jennings, Ga., 238 F. 48, 151 C.C.A. 124, reversing, D.C., Jennings v. Smith, 232 F. 921, and certiorari denied Jennings v. Smith, 37 S.Ct. 399, 243 U.S. 635, 61 L.Ed. 940.

Proceedings for liquidation

(1) Under the Indiana statutes, giving the court in which an action for the liquidation of a bank is brought, complete jurisdiction over the assets and, under which, it directs the management, control, and operation of the property, settles the rights of the parties, allows and fixes the amount of claims and directs distribution and liquidation, the custody of property by the department of financial institutions, under an order of the court, gives the court such possession of the res as disables a federal court from foreclosing a mortgage and ordering a sale of the property.—Department of Financial Institutions of Indiana v. Mercantile-Commerce Bank & Trust Co., C.C.A. Ind., 92 F.2d 639, certiorari denied

Mercantile Commerce Bank & Trust Co. v. Department of Financial Institutions of State of Indiana, 58 S.Ct. 760, two cases, 303 U.S. 656, 32 L.Ed. 1116.

(2) State court proceedings for liquidation of insolvent bank, and intervention of United States therein to establish claim, is in rem, precluding subsequent exercise of jurisdiction by federal court in suit to establish priority.—People's Trust Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.N.H., 23 F.2d 381, vacating, D.C., U. S. v. People's Trust Co., 17 F.2d 437.

Garnishment

Where garnishment proceeding was begun in state court and garnishee filed interpleader suit in federal court, state court could proceed to judgment.—City Nat. Bank of Lawton, Okl. v. Lummus Cotton Gin Sales Co., Tex.Civ.App., 297 S.W. 563, affirmed Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Lummus Cotton Gin Sales Co., Com.App., 6 S.W.2d 728, motion denied 9 S.W.2d 1112.

Partition

State court, having first acquired jurisdiction of specific property by issuance and service of process in partition suit, could retain jurisdiction for purpose of partitioning land, without interference by federal court in action to quiet title.—Miller v. Griffin, 128 So. 416, 99 Fla. 976.

Action to foreclose lien

(1) If the state court once assumes jurisdiction of an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, it will retain it to the exclusion of any interference with its control of the property by a federal court until the lien action is finally determined.—Rogers, etc., Hardware Co. v. Cleveland Bldg. Co., 32 S.W. 1, affirmed 34 S.W. 57, 132 Mo. 442, 31 L.R.A. 335, 53 Am.S.R. 494.

(2) However, if the property has been seized in a forfeiture proceeding by the United States, a state court cannot enforce a mechanic's lien.—Heldritter v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co., C.C.N.J., 6 F. 138, affirmed 5 S.Ct. 135, 112 U.S. 294, 28 L.Ed. 729.

jurisdiction, the jurisdiction of the federal courts with respect to the property is not thereby defeated;⁶⁶ and it is also held that where a sheriff has taken, under process of a state court, more than enough property to satisfy the judgment, the property is not in custodia legis in such sense as to prevent a subsequent levy under process of a federal court, so as to give the creditor at whose instance such process is issued a lien on the excess.⁶⁷ So, also, where a vessel has a lien on the cargo in its possession, enforceable in admiralty, a state court cannot preclude the vessel from enforcing such lien in admiralty, or deprive it of such possession while the lien continues.⁶⁸ Where, because of a mortgagee's failure to disclose the facts, a federal court has, on his petition, appointed a receiver over property after the state court has acquired jurisdiction and control over it in a foreclosure proceeding, the federal court may, as a condition precedent to allowing plaintiff to proceed in the state court, require that he reimburse the federal court receiver for sums paid for taxes and other expenses in preserving the property.⁶⁹

Notwithstanding a federal court has taken possession of the property, its jurisdiction is exclusive only in so far as restriction of the power of other courts is necessary for the federal court's appropriate control and disposition of the property;⁷⁰ and state courts having jurisdiction to adjudicate rights in the property do not, because the property is possessed by a federal court, lose power to render any judgment not in conflict with the federal court's authority to decide questions within its jurisdiction and to make such decisions effective by its control of the property;⁷¹ and, similarly, a federal court may make like adjudications with respect to property in the possession of a state court.⁷²

Judgment of state court in personam was not affected by possession of defendant's property by federal court.—International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Adkins, D.C.Tex., 14 F.2d 149, affirmed, C.C.A., International Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Adkins, 18 F.2d 481, certiorari denied 48 S.Ct. 36, 275 U.S. 533, 72 L.Ed. 411.

Pennsylvania court's decree declaring escheat to commonwealth of unclaimed moneys found by federal district court to be due to bondholders and subsequently transferred from court's registry to federal treasury's account in bank within commonwealth was not an unconstitutional interference with district court, where district court acquired jurisdiction because of diversity of citizenship, since, after adjudicating parties' rights, district court retained jurisdiction only to dispose of moneys, and beyond that its jurisdiction and possession did not curtail power which commonwealth could constitutionally exercise over persons and property within its territory.—U. S. v. Klein, 58 S.Ct. 536, 303 U.S. 276, 82 L.Ed. 840, affirming In re Escheat of Moneys in Custody of U. S. Treasury, 192 A. 256, 326 Pa. 260.

Appointment of state officer to control property

State court, after jurisdiction of federal district court over assets of insolvent corporation had attached, could nevertheless designate state insurance commissioner as vehicle of state authority to control property of corporation whenever control could lawfully be acquired.—Penn General Casualty Co. v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania ex rel. Schnader, 55 S.Ct. 386, 294 U.S. 189, 79 L.Ed. 850, reversing *Commonwealth ex rel. Schnader v. Right to share in distribution of estate

A citizen of another state who is a distributee of an estate may establish in federal court his right to share in such estate and enforce such adjudication against the administrator or his sureties or against any other person liable therefor or proceed in any way which does not disturb the possession of the property by the state court.—Wells v. Helms, C.C.A.Okla., 105 F.2d 402.

Adjudication of claims

(1) In suit by national bank receiver in federal court to establish receiver's claims against mortgage pool trust fund administered in state court, federal court, although authorized to adjudicate claims and their priority over claims of participation certificate holders, had no right to order trustee to pay bank out of moneys collected on the mortgages, that being interference with res in possession of state court.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Atwood, C.C.A.Pa., 78 F.2d 92, certiorari granted 55 S.Ct. 124, 296 U.S. 566, 80 L.Ed. 399, affirmed Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Bradford, 56 S.Ct. 600, 297 U.S. 613, 80 L.Ed. 920.

(2) While federal court cannot reach into state court and take res there being administered or enforce right to specific property in possession of state court's receiver or trustee, federal court on jurisdiction otherwise shown, such as diversity of citizenship or liquidation of national bank, may establish claim constituting basis of right to participate in distribution of property in possession of state court and has jurisdiction of national bank receiver's suit to establish claim against mortgage pool trust of which bank had been trustee but which was now being administered in state court by successor trustee, although establishment of such claim would involve adjudication of priority of the claim over claims of participation certificate holders.—Commonwealth Trust Co. of

Priority of possession controls with respect to jurisdiction of property so that the court which first obtains possession of the property has jurisdiction thereof to the exclusion of another court of concurrent jurisdiction in which an action relating to the property was first commenced;⁷³ but the orderly administration of justice and the necessity of avoiding a conflict of jurisdiction require that the court which last acquired jurisdiction, although it be the first to acquire possession of the property involved in the litigation, shall surrender such possession, on application, to the court of concurrent jurisdiction which first acquired jurisdiction of the controversy, unless the issues in the subsequent suit are different from the issues in the prior suit relating to the same property.⁷⁴ Where a court has improvidently and without jurisdiction taken possession of property, it should surrender posses-

After custody of one court has terminated, another court is, of course, at liberty to take possession of the property.⁷⁶

§ 534. — Effect of Receivership in General

- a. General statement
- b. Limitations of rule

a. General Statement

The appointment of a receiver brings the property into the custody of the court; and where either a federal court or a state court appoints a receiver the other court will not thereafter interfere with his possession of the property.

The appointment of a receiver brings property into the custody of the court in such sense that it

Pittsburgh v. Atwood, C.C.A.Pa., 78 F.2d 92, certiorari granted 56 S.Ct. 124, 296 U.S. 566, 80 L.Ed. 399, affirmed Commonwealth Trust Co. of Pittsburgh v. Bradford, 56 S.Ct. 600, 297 U.S. 613, 80 L.Ed. 920.

(3) Rule withdrawing property, taken into possession of court of competent jurisdiction through its officers by appropriate proceedings, from jurisdiction of all other courts, does not prevent one entitled to invoke federal jurisdiction from resorting to federal court to establish amount of his debt and validity of his mortgage on property in possession of state court, and to obtain, but not to execute, foreclosure decree.—Lubbock Hotel Co. v. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., C.C.A.Tex., 77 F.2d 152.

(4) A federal district court had jurisdiction of suit for declaratory judgment as to right to liens or preference against funds of surety company being liquidated by state superintendent of insurance under New York Insurance Law, as against contention that claims should be asserted in state court having funds in its hands.—Dempsey v. Pink, C.C.A.N.Y., 92 F.2d 572, certiorari denied Pink v. Dempsey, 58 S.Ct. 745, 303 U.S. 648, 83 L.Ed. 1109, Dempsey v. Pink, 58 S.Ct. 747, 303 U.S. 648, 82 L.Ed. 1109.

Enforcement of lien

Holder of mortgage on property in possession of state probate court is entitled to enforce lien in any tribunal having proper jurisdiction.—Benington County Sav. Bank v. Commercial Nat. Bank of Shreveport, D.C.La., 2 F.Supp. 201.

Administration of trust

The rule that action brought in federal court merely to establish interest or right to share in property being administered in state court may properly be prosecuted, since judgment in such suit would not disturb the control of the state court over the fund or estate as to which it had taken jurisdiction, is subject to limitation that exercise of such jurisdiction of federal court does not include power to draw to it the administration of the estate or to interfere in any way with its management or control. The administration of a trust falls within the class of cases governed by the principle giving to the court first assuming jurisdiction in proceedings quasi in rem the exclusive right to determine questions of administration and management, as distinguished from the adjudication of individual rights and interests in the res; and an accounting by fiduciaries is in itself a proceeding "quasi in rem" in the sense that it not only adjudicates legality of investments constituting the trust, but also, if it results in a surcharge, orders payment and restitution of monies to the trust res.—Thompson v. Fitzgerald, 198 A. 58, 329 Pa. 497, certiorari granted Princess Lida of Thurn and Taxis v. Fitzgerald, 59 S.Ct. 72, 305 U.S. 582, 83 L.Ed. 366, affirmed Princess Lida of Thurn and Taxis v. Thompson, 59 S.Ct. 275, 305 U.S. 456, 83 L.Ed. 285.

Claim and delivery action brought in a federal court to recover possession of property in a sheriff's possession under an attachment does not involve interference with the state court's jurisdiction where the federal court has the power to award a judgment for the value of the property.—Oakes v. Lake, Idaho, 54 S.Ct. 13, 290 U.S. 59, 78 L.Ed. 168, reversing, C.C.A., 62 F.2d 728, and certiorari granted 53 S.Ct. 594, 289 U.S. 717, 77 L.Ed. 1469.

Suit to enforce assignment of interest in an estate may be brought in a federal court of equity jurisdiction although the res is in possession of a probate court.—Chase Nat. Bank of New York v. Sayles, C.C.A.R.I., 11 F.2d 948, 48 A.L.R. 207, reversing, D.C., 6 F.2d 403, and certiorari denied Sayles v. Chase Nat. Bank of City of New York, 47 S.Ct. 99, 273 U.S. 708, 71 L.Ed. 841.

Property removed from jurisdiction

Where a federal court, after permitting the recording of liens on two naval tugs being constructed allowed the United States to take and remove them from its jurisdiction without notice to the lienors, its failure to protect the liens was not a denial of the lienors' right to pursue their remedies against the vessels elsewhere, so that to grant such rights in the state to which the vessels were removed would not be reviewing an order of the federal court.—Obrecht v. Vinyard, 114 A. 168, 12 Del.Ch. 350.

is entitled to retain exclusive jurisdiction with respect thereto,⁷⁷ even though the receiver has not taken actual possession.⁷⁸ Accordingly, the general rule is that, where a receiver has been appointed by a federal court, his possession will not be interfered with by any proceedings in a state court,⁷⁹ and the federal courts will accord the same deference to the possession of a receiver appointed by a state court.⁸⁰ The rule extends to reserving the exclusive jurisdiction of the court over all matters

Procedure to acquire property

Court appointing receiver has possession of res, and comity requires another court, instead of immediately ordering receiver to surrender res, to instruct its officer to request possessing court to direct surrender by receiver, and, on refusal, demanding court will determine whether to direct appeal or to adopt coercive measures.—In re White Star Refining Co., C.C.A.Tex., 74 F.2d 269, certiorari denied *Portner v. Receiver of foreign corporation

Where federal court in New York appointed receivers for Delaware chain-store corporation doing business in several states, including Georgia, who were also appointed in federal court in Georgia in ancillary proceeding, Georgia superior court's refusal to vacate its appointment of receiver is erroneous.—Isaac Silver & Bros. Co. v. Kalmon, 165 S.E. 434, 175 Ga. 244.

Garnishment

(1) Levy of garnishment, issued out of state court, to impound funds in hands of federal equity receiver, is void.—Republic Supply Co. v. Del Rey Oil & Refining Co., D.C.Cal., 50 F.2d 639.

(2) Where federal court appointed receiver to take possession of assets of building and loan association, while creditor could maintain suit for personal judgment in state court, he could not enforce it by writ of garnishment against property in possession of the receiver previously appointed, even though appeal was taken, supersedeas bond given, and receiver did not take possession.—Forst v. Intermountain Building & Loan Ass'n, 65 P.2d 1379, 49 Ariz. 246.

15 C.J. p 1172 note 55 [c].

Quo warranto proceedings

As a state court will not seize or undertake to exercise authority over property properly in possession of federal court, a state court should not in quo warranto proceeding direct ouster of street railroad company operating under federal court receivership, although quo warranto proceeding was begun before appointment of receiver, since constructive possession is not acquired by quo warranto proceedings.—State ex rel. Wear v. Cincinnati & L. E. R. Co., 190 N.E. 224, 128 Ohio St. 95.

Where receiver appointed for real estate

Where decedent was exclusive owner of plant furnishing electric power, which he conveyed in trust under a deed entitling him during his lifetime to demand and receive from trustees beneficial certificates representing value of his interest in the property, his interest therein constituted personal property, and circuit court's power to assume jurisdiction of trust estate, and to administer it for benefit of persons interested therein, was not affected by proceedings in United States district court assuming jurisdiction of all real estate of which decedent died possessed.—Elkton Electric Co. v. Perkins, 125 A. 851, 145 Md. 224, certiorari denied 45 S.Ct. 90, 266 U.S. 602, 69 L.Ed. 462 and error dismissed 45 S.Ct. 124, 266 U.S. 585, 69 L.Ed. 454.

Where construction of federal statutes involved

Temporary receiver

Where order of federal court appointing receiver gave him full authority to take possession of all property, and use every method to preserve it, subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and enjoined the company and its creditors from interfering with such possession, the rule as to interference with possession by other courts applied, although receiver was called a temporary receiver.—Forst v. Intermountain Building & Loan Ass'n, 65 P.2d 1379, 49 Ariz. 246.

Trial court abused its discretion in appointing general receiver for corporation at request of minority stockholders seeking to recover money judgments from officers and directors of corporation for alleged mismanagement, where corporation was not a party to the action and its assets had been transferred to another corporation whose assets were in the custody of a receiver in federal court.—*Skirvin v. Appointment of receiver by federal court

A stockholder is not entitled to appointment of receiver by federal court on ground of fraud in procuring appointment of state court receiver with knowledge that plaintiff was about to file bill and other stockholders' assurances, because of legitimately connected with, or growing out of, the receivership,⁸¹ and applies even though the appointment of the receiver was improvident;⁸² but it is otherwise if the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver.⁸³

Where a federal court has erroneously appointed a receiver, he may continue in possession of the property until the appointment of a receiver by a state court or, in default thereof, until the federal court has had hearings on whether its order appointing the receiver should be made permanent.⁸⁴ Where a state court has acquired jurisdiction of the property by the appointment of a receiver, it may order a sale of the property on a decree of a federal court entered and certified to the state court after the latter had acquired jurisdiction.⁸⁵ Where, under the laws of a state the state banking commissioner in taking charge of property of an insolvent bank does not act in the capacity of a receiver, his possession is not the possession of a state court which would exclude the jurisdiction of a federal court to entertain a suit to establish rights in the property, where it otherwise has jurisdiction.⁸⁶ On the other hand, where a state insurance superintendent on taking over a corporation's property becomes in effect a receiver, the property is in custodia legis and a federal court has no right to interfere.⁸⁷ Where a state court, proceeding in rem for foreclosure of a mortgage, has not perfected its jurisdiction by a seizure of the property or even issued process whereby a constructive seizure could be established, and a fed-which he postponed doing so; and claims that corporation's note was procured by fraud, that holder was not purchaser for value nor stockholder, that action for appointment of receiver was collusive, etc., do not go to state court's jurisdiction to appoint receiver. The federal court will not appoint a receiver on ground that stockholder's rights will not be protected in state court because of its receiver's relationship to president of bank holding corporation's notes, court assuming that state court will do justice to all, and such relationship did not affect state court's jurisdiction to appoint receiver.—Superior Oil Corporation v. Matlock, C.C.A.Okla., 47 F.2d 993.

Attachment issued out of federal court

The jurisdiction of a court of equity in receivership proceedings over a corporation doing business in the state is not impaired by attachment of the corporation's property on process issuing out of a federal court in the absence of a supervening and binding act of congress to that effect.—New England Theatres v. Olympia Theatres, Mass., 192 N. E. 98, certiorari denied E. M. Loew's Inc. v. New England Theatres, 55 S. Ct. 509, 294 U.S. 713, 79 L.Ed. 1247.

Priority of state receivership

(1) State court receiver was not bound to intervene in subsequent receivership proceeding in federal court and become party, but might petition summarily for possession of property, and the federal receivership under principles of comity should yield possession of property to state court receiver, where federal court receivership was junior to that of state court.—Lee v. Edmunds, C.C.A.Fla., 66 F.2d 122.

(2) Receiver appointed by state court having jurisdiction may retain possession and control of properties after later appointment of federal court receiver.—Superior Oil Corporation v. Matlock, C.C.A.Okla., 47 F.2d 993.

Voluntary surrender held not shown

State court of competent jurisdiction first acquiring custody of property and having it in possession of receiver cannot be thereafter divested of that custody by order of federal court made in a subsequently instituted equitable action, and an ex parte statement of attorney that judge of state court had expressed willingness to surrender possession of property then in custody of receiver is insufficient to constitute voluntary surrender so as to vest federal court with jurisdiction of such property.—U. S. v. Mashunkashey, C.C.A.Okla., 72 F.2d 847, rehearing denied 73 F.2d 487, certiorari denied Mashunkashey v. U. S., 55 S. Ct. 551, 294 U.S. 724, 79 L.Ed. 255.

Liquidation proceedings

Where principal under bond, securing return of vessel seized under prohibition laws, deposited money with surety, and money was taken over by liquidator of surety appointed under New York laws, federal court was without jurisdiction of claim for deposit, state court having exclusive jurisdiction thereof in liquidation proceedings.—U. S. v. Brown, D.C.N.Y., 3 F.Supp. 608.

Funds in state auditor's hands

Intervening petition, praying that state court, assuming jurisdiction of proceedings for liquidation of bank, to which petitioner was appointed successor as trustee of certain fund, direct payment of petitioner's claim to trust assets, not accounted for by bank receiver, from proceeds of securities deposited with state auditor by bank as condition precedent to doing trust business, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction over fund in auditor's hands on state court, and the mere fact that some necessary parties to state court proceedings for liquidation of bank are not before such court would not justify federal court in assuming jurisdiction over such proceeds.—Old First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Fort Wayne, Ind. v. Barrett, D.C. Ill., 14 F.Supp. 778.

Proofs and allowance of claims

In proceedings by trustees in bankruptcy to subject, to payment of claims, bonds deposited by insolvent state bank in order to qualify as depository for moneys of bankrupt estates, federal court should provide only for payment, from proceeds of sale of bonds, of costs, expenses, and for ratable distribution among trustees and leave proofs of claims against receivership estate and extent to which they may be allowed to state court appointing receiver.—*Evans v. eral receiver has been appointed who has taken possession of the property, the federal court should yield possession of the property to the state court where it appears that the delay was caused by the mortgagor.⁸⁸

On a motion in a federal court for an order directing its receivers to turn over the property of a corporation to receivers appointed by a state court after a hearing, the federal court cannot review the findings of the state court based on evidence, but is limited to a consideration of the question of priority of jurisdiction.⁸⁹ Where a state court has first acquired jurisdiction, it may properly direct its receiver, appointed after a federal receiver had been appointed, to intervene in the federal court and ask for the discharge of the federal court receiver and surrender of the property to the receiver of the state court.⁹⁰

Mere commencement of an action seeking a receivership of the property of a corporation has been held to give a state court in which such action is brought such jurisdiction over the property of the corporation within the state as to exclude the jurisdiction of a federal court with respect thereto;⁹¹ and, likewise, commencement of a suit in the federal court will give it exclusive jurisdiction;⁹² but the contrary view has been asserted where the suits were not identical as to the interests of parties.⁹³

On termination of receivership another court may take possession of the property,⁹⁴ even though no order discharging the receiver has ever been entered of record.⁹⁵

Production of evidence in other courts by receiver. Comity requires that a federal court whose receiver has possession of documents should facilitate the production of evidence required for litigation pending in a state court so far as this may be done without interfering with the administration of the receivership;⁹⁶ and the state court may request the production of books from the federal receiver in furtherance of justice, where consented to by the federal court;⁹⁷ such court having the inherent power to request the federal court to enable the examination of books in the possession of the federal receiver, and to subpoena documentary evidence without notice.⁹⁸ It is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the court appointing the receiver to determine whether the production of such evidence will unduly interfere with the receivership.⁹⁹

b. Limitations of Rule

The appointment of a receiver will not preclude one court from entertaining proceedings which relate to the property in the hands of the receiver, where such proceedings do not interfere with the receivership or the possession of the court by which the receiver was appointed.

Claims of receiver

The federal court was not without jurisdiction of suit by receiver of insolvent national bank to recover assessments against stock composing part of estate of deceased stockholder on ground that res was in possession of a state court.—Hart v. Burke, D.C.Pa., 25 F.Supp. 945.

Claims against purchaser of railroad sold in receivership

(1) Under a statute requiring a purchaser of a railroad at a receivership sale, as a condition to reincorporating and doing business in the state, to pay for "current expenses" of operation accruing within two years of the sale, execution on judgment of state court for such expenses is not interference by state court with jurisdiction of federal courts, although federal court reserved jurisdiction for purpose of disposition of claims; and the mortgagee of railroad took mortgage subject to the statute, but such taking would not deprive it of right to be heard in state court, before that court could take from it any property rights.—Mercantile Trust Co. v. Binford, D. C.Tex., 6 F.2d 285.

(2) Although plaintiffs' demand was originally against old railroad company, where purchasers of property from receiver incorporated under the statute making property liable for old company's debts, the basis of plaintiffs' claim against the property was an independent and voluntary transaction in nature of contract and fact that federal court had jurisdiction of receivership and determined validity and priority of claims therein did not preclude state court from jurisdiction on claim under statute.

U.S.—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Binford, C.C.A.Tex., 10 F. 2d 436, certiorari denied 47 S.Ct. 91, 273 U.S. 694, 71 L.Ed. 844, followed in *International Great Northern R. Co. v. (3) Retained jurisdiction of federal court of railroad receivership proceeding does not preclude determination by state court of claim against successor company.—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Swayne, 1 S.W.2d 609, 117 Tex. 247—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Texas Co., Tex.Civ.App., 280 S.W. 282, petition dismissed 47 S.Ct. 96, 273 U.S. 702, 771, 71 L.Ed. 884.

(4) In an action for personal injuries occurring during receivership of railroad against one purchasing the property at sale under decree of federal court, a judgment by its terms operating only against defendant's person or at most establishing amount and validity of the claim without directing payment out of any particular property, was within the jurisdiction of the state court, and assuming that the federal district court, in confirming the sale, could reserve jurisdiction over personal injury suits filed against the company after foreclosure and delivery of the property, its subsequent order refusing to restrain prosecution of such suit in a county court showed that it did not do so.—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Oehler, Tex.Civ. App., 262 S.W. 785.

Foreclosure

A federal court had jurisdiction of bill by trustee for mortgage bondholders to establish indebtedness and obtain foreclosure decree, notwithstanding mortgaged property was in hands of receiver appointed by state district court, but its decree of foreclosure of property in possession of receiver appointed by state court is an improper invasion of state court's jurisdiction in so far as undertaking completely to direct and control foreclosure proceedings to be had in state court, including making of allowances against proceeds, and in so far as reserving jurisdiction to proceed with foreclosure, if state court did not.—Lubbock Hotel Co. v. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., C.C.A. Tex., 77 F.2d 152.

Garnishment

Words "court of competent jurisdiction" within statute providing that comptroller administering affairs of insolvent national banks shall make ratable dividends of moneys paid over to him by receivers on all such claims as may have been proved to his satisfaction or adjudicated in court of competent jurisdiction are not confined to federal courts, but apply as well to state courts, and hence funds in hands of receiver of national bank were subject to writ of garnishment of state court.—Rawlings v. American Oil Co., 161 So. 851, 173 Miss. 683.

Injunction

(1) Mortgagee of street railway, by securing receiver in state court, was not precluded from suing in federal court to enjoin operation of motor busses by others.—Equitable Trust Co. of New York v. Denney, C.C.A.Ind., 24 F.2d 169.

(2) Injunction against federal receiver operating bus company illegally is not interference with property in receiver's custody, but related to acts outside receivership which state court could enjoin.—Yonkers R. Co. v. Hume, 233 N.Y.S. 63, 225 App.Div. 313.

Trustee in bankruptcy as stakeholder

Under stipulation for sale by trustee of bankrupt's assets and holding of proceeds pending decision in replevin action, no question of adjudicating title to property already in custodia legis was involved in such action.—Sparks v. Kuss, 216 N.W. 329, 135 Wis. 378, modified on other grounds 218 N.W. 208, 195 Wis. 378.

Sale of leasehold interest in property in hands of receiver

A federal court, in receivership suit involving the "property, assets and business owned by, or under the control, or in the possession of," an oil company, had no jurisdiction of an undivided interest owned by an individual in an oil and gas leasehold estate, although oil company owned rest of lease and had exclusive right to develop and operate the entire leasehold, and hence sale to third persons of individual's interest under foreclosure and execution proceedings was not void as depriving the receiver of possession of property.—Patton v. Rabinowitz, Tex.Civ.App., 114 S.W.2d 310.

Appointment of receiver by state court

Notwithstanding the fact that assets of corporation were within control of receivers of federal district court, who were conducting its business, a receiver would be appointed where Corporation Act, 2 Comp.St. 1910 p 1638, § 63 et seq, relating to insolvency, and public policy required that there should be a statutory agent known as a receiver, and creditors and stockholders were entitled to appointment of receiver to represent their interests as well as interests of corporation, and the court of chancery would take jurisdiction, under the statute whose statutory requisites were present, since proceedings in the federal district court did not exclude proceedings in court of chancery under the act. The receiver appointed by the court of chancery would be instructed to apply to federal court, whose receivers were administering its business, to set up proceedings in court of chancery and urge that they supersede proceedings in federal court, and ask it to direct delivery of assets to court of chancery for administration, but not to subject himself to jurisdiction of federal court, and will be directed to cooperate with federal district court.—Michel v. William Necker, Inc., 106 A. 449, 90 N.J.Eq. 171.

Continuance of suit filed in state court for accounting by liquidating trustees before suit in federal court for receivership is not barred by federal receivership, although it must proceed strictly in personam for benefit of original plaintiffs.—Brown v. Duffin, C.C.A.Ky., 13 F.2d 708.

bill filed in a state court incidentally prays for relief which, if granted, might interfere with the constructive possession of property by receivers of a federal court does not authorize the latter court to enjoin the prosecution of the suit, where the principal relief sought therein does not trench on its jurisdiction.² So, also, a state court is not deprived of the jurisdiction of a mandamus proceeding brought by a subscriber to the stock of a consolidated association to compel the recorder of mortgages, on the ground that the state stock subscribed has been fully paid for, to cancel the record of a mortgage given to secure the subscription, the mortgage having been pledged by the association to the state as security for a loan, by the fact that receivers for such association have been appointed by the United States circuit court;³ and where the subject matter of a receivership in a federal court has been disposed of, it is proper to issue an order of sale where a judgment has been obtained in a state court foreclosing a tax lien.⁴ Possession of the property of a corporation by a federal court receiver will not prevent proceedings in a state court to oust the corporation from the state,⁵ but a restraining order issued by the state court to prevent the corporation from receiving any of the property in the possession of the receiver would be ineffectual.⁶ The appointment of a receiver for a corporation by a state court does not prevent one who began a suit in a federal court before such appointment from prosecuting it to judgment;⁷ and where receivership proceedings were pending against an old corporation in a federal court, a state court did not encroach on the jurisdiction of the federal court by assuming jurisdiction of an action against a new corporation, as successor of the old corporation, on a judgment against the latter.⁸ Neither will a federal court be prevented from entertaining jurisdiction of a suit to set aside conveyances, as void against judgment creditors, by the fact that a receiver has been appointed in the state court.⁹ Where a receiver is appointed by both a federal and a state court, the latter court, although first appointing him, is held to have no jurisdiction over him as to property out of the state;¹⁰ and where a railroad runs through several states, and the entire line is inseparable, a federal court may appoint a receiver therefor, notwithstanding the fact that different state courts have appointed receivers.¹¹ A federal court which in a foreclosure suit has taken possession by its receivers of all the property of a corporation, situated in several states, has power to turn over possession and control and management of the property in one of such states to receivers appointed by a court of such state.¹² Where a suit by nonresident stockholders of a corporation for the appointment of a receiver was brought within the jurisdiction of a federal court by bad faith or through collusion, the federal court will not retain jurisdiction as against proceedings in a state court for dissolution of the corporation.¹³

A federal court receiver of a corporation which assigned a leasehold as security for an indebtedness which had not been paid is not entitled to possession of the leasehold as against a subsequently appointed state court receiver of the assignee in possession, as the receiver of the corporation had no greater right than the corporation, which could acquire the right to possession of the leasehold only on payment of the debt.¹⁴

A receiver appointed by a state court may in some cases bring an action in the federal court affecting the receivership property;¹⁵ but if the state court refuses to permit a receiver of an insolvent corporation appointed by it to sue the officers for fraudulent misappropriation of its property, jurisdiction of the suit will not be entertained by a federal court.¹⁶ A receiver appointed by a federal court, who commences an action in a state court to collect money alleged to be due him as such receiver, cannot object to the jurisdiction of the state court to adjudicate on a set-off pleaded by defendant.¹⁷ Where a receiver sues in a federal court on a claim against an estate in the possession of a state court, the federal court can do no more than adjudicate the validity and amount of the claim.¹⁸

b. Actions against Receivers

In a proper case, actions against receivers appointed by federal or state courts may be brought in courts other than those of the jurisdiction appointing the receiver. Where leave to sue is required, it must be obtained before suit can be brought in a court other than the one appointing the receiver.

Where a state court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, it may entertain a suit against a receiver appointed by a federal court for the purpose of recovering a money judgment;¹⁹ nor is a federal receivership of a railroad any obstacle to a mandamus from a state court requiring the railroad to construct a line through a county seat according to the state constitution and statutes.²⁰ Where, pending a bill against a corporation for injunction and accounting for infringement of a patent, the corporation is dissolved by a state court, and its assets placed in the hands of a receiver, the federal court has power to grant a bill of revivor against the receiver.²¹ However, a state court cannot entertain an action against a federal receiver to prevent him from carrying out the orders of the court of which he is an officer;²² or to compel him to do what the order of the court appointing him makes a matter for his discretion;²³ nor can a railroad maintain in a state court a proceeding against the federal receiver of another railroad to condemn a grade crossing.²⁴ A federal court of one state will not refuse to entertain garnishment against a receiver appointed by a court of equity of another state, although he is exempt from such proceeding in the latter state, where the petition is properly presented by citizens within the jurisdiction of the former court, and no objection to jurisdiction exists on other grounds.²⁵ An action in tort against a receiver is controlled by the appointing court so far as is necessary to insure prompt equitable distribution of the receivership funds.²⁶

Leave of court making the appointment is not a prerequisite to an action in a state court against a federal receiver where the cause of action is based on some act or omission connected with the carrying on of the business pertaining to the receivership;²⁷ but in other cases leave of the appointing

Protection of federal receivers from suit

The federal government has ample power to determine wisdom of protecting federal receivers from suits and to protect them where it is deemed necessary against inequitable proceedings, notwithstanding statute permitting actions against federal receivers to be maintained in state courts without leave of court appointing receiver, and determination of what is equitable, or inequitable, rests with federal government, and any curtailment of power of federal courts to control actions against receivers would be assumed by state court to have been deliberately done by congress on considerations which were deemed sufficient; and state courts should not exercise equitable jurisdiction to restore to federal receivers protection against suits, of which protection congress has seen fit to deprive them. The determination of the jurisdiction in which federal receivers may be sued is for congress and the federal courts, and state courts have no jurisdiction to control situs of actions against them. Thus, an Indiana court was without jurisdiction to grant injunction restraining employee injured on a railroad in Indiana from prosecuting an action in Illinois against receivers of railroad appointed by federal court in Missouri, on ground that prosecution of action in Illinois would subject receivers to hardship, inconvenience, and expense.—Pitcairn v. Drummond, Ind., 23 N.E.2d 21.

court must be obtained before a federal receiver can be sued in a state court.²⁵ A provision of the judicial code authorizing federal court receivers to be sued without leave does not give another court jurisdiction of a suit affecting the possession, control, or management of the property by the receiver or the conduct of his business.²⁹ The federal courts will decline to entertain an action against a receiver appointed by a state court, which action is brought without leave of the state court.³⁰

§ 536. Assumption and Exercise of Conflict-jurisdiction in General

Whether a state or federal court can or will assume jurisdiction of controversies of which the other court has previously assumed jurisdiction is considered generally in § 529 supra; over proceedings involving the process or judgments of the other court, see §§ 537-539 infra; or with respect to prisoners under arrest, commitment, detention, or sentence see the title Criminal Law § 145.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 537. Process or Judgments of Another Court

Jurisdiction of federal courts with respect to the process and judgments of state courts is considered in § 538 infra, and jurisdiction of state courts with respect to the process and judgments of federal courts, in § 539 infra.

§ 538. — Jurisdiction of Federal Court with Respect to State Court

A federal court may take jurisdiction of an action or suit based on a judgment of a state court. While a federal court cannot ordinarily vacate or modify the judgment, it may, by reason of such matters outside the record as fraud or want of jurisdiction, grant proper relief and deprive a party of the benefits of a judgment obtained by extrinsic fraud.

A federal court may take jurisdiction of an action or suit based on a judgment rendered in a state court,³¹ and may give equitable relief under a state statute, on a judgment and execution in a state court, where property has been fraudulently conveyed to defeat creditors.³²

In accordance with the rules governing equitable relief against judgments generally, which are considered in the C.J.S. title Judgments §§ 341-400, also 34 C.J. p 432 note 1-p 501 note 2, federal courts of equity, having no supervisory or appellate jurisdiction over state courts, cannot ordinarily reverse, vacate, modify, or annul a judgment, or decree rendered by a state court of competent jurisdiction,³³

Actions held properly brought without permission

(1) Federal receivership court's permission for creditor to commence state suit to liquidate debt is unnecessary, and the federal receivership court's denying petition of guarantor, sued in state court on guaranty of debtor corporation's contract, to join receivers as defendants, is not abuse of discretion, particularly since guarantor's claim could be liquidated by suing corporation.—Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Fox Theatres Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 69 F.2d 60, 91 A.L.R. 991.

(2) Under Judicial Code § 66, Comp.St. § 1048, authorizing suits against receivers without leave of court, an action against one purchasing property of a railroad company at foreclosure sale, under a decree requiring it to assume the liabilities of the receiver appointed in the foreclosure suit, is properly brought, in a state court, and this provision of the Code does not limit the preceding clause, authorizing suits against the receivers, but merely reserves to the court appointing a receiver jurisdiction over the mode of enforcing collection of the claim when judicially liquidated, so far as necessary to protect the property and adjust the equities of all claimants.—American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., D.C.Mich., 263 F. 237.

15 C.J. p 1175 note 88.

Suits for possession of property in hands of federal receivers are not maintainable in state court without consent of federal court.—Field v. Kansas City Refining Co., C.C.A.Mo., 9 F.2d 213, certiorari denied 46 S.Ct. 489, 271 U.S. 676, 70 L.Ed. 1146.

More continuous administration of property under order of court does not constitute an "act" or "transaction," within Judicial Code § 66, permitting certain suits to be brought without leave.—Field v. Kansas City Refining Co., supra.

Attachment

Claimant in primary equity receivership in federal court was not entitled to enforce claim and levy writ of attachment, without leave of court, in state court in jurisdiction where ancillary receiver had been appointed, since claimant thereby undertook to interfere with property constructively in ancillary receiver's possession.—Woodbury v. Pickering Lumber Co., D.C.Mo., 17 F.Supp. 575.

Constitutional question

(1) Federal courts do not have jurisdiction to set aside judgment of state court for error even though a constitutional question was involved.—Reese v. Louisville Trust Co., C.C.A.Ky., 58 F.2d 638—15 C.J. p 1176 note 95 [b].

(2) In another case, which did not expressly assert or deny the power of the federal court to set aside a judgment of the state court on the ground that due process had been denied, evidence was held insufficient to establish such denial.—Willis v. Scott, C.C.A.Okla., 40 F.2d 330, rehearing denied 41 F.2d 523, and certiorari denied 51 S.Ct. 80, 252 U.S. 877, 75 L.Ed. 774.

Presumption of validity; futility of action

In action in federal court to set aside state supreme court judgment affirming judgment of superior court, it must be presumed that the judgment was concurred in by the requisite number of judges, in absence of showing to the contrary; and even if that judgment was a nullity it would not be set aside, since the superior court judgment would still be in effect.—Lolita Holding Co. v. Aronson, & Co., C.C.A.Cal., 28 F.2d 869, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 482, 279 U.S. 868, 73 L.Ed. 1005.

Nonresidents

A federal court will not review matters which were decided by, or could have been raised in, the state court, even though the parties seeking relief in the federal court were not residents of the state, since that fact does not entitle them to await outcome of proceedings in the state court and then call on federal court to determine issues determinable in state court.—Grimes v. Grimes, D.C.Nev., 52 F.2d 171.

Amendment of execution cannot be allowed by a federal court where the state supreme court has refused to allow such amendment.—Kent v. Roberts, C.C.Me., 14 F.Cas.No. 7,715, 2 Story 591.

Prior jurisdiction in federal court

Where, however, after the federal court had acquired jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter in a condemnation proceeding, a special proceeding, involving the same parties and subject matter, was started in a state court, the federal court could, where the circumstances warranted it, set aside the orders and decrees of the state court and place the parties in the same position they were in before the state proceeding was started, and could subsequently decide all questions in the condemnation proceeding.—U. S. v. Blanton, D.C.N.C., 270 F. 321.

Rights under naturalization certificate

Where, by statute, federal court would have jurisdiction of an action to cancel a naturalization certificate, it has jurisdiction of a suit by the United States to set aside a judgment of a state court reestablishing rights granted under a certificate which was destroyed.—U. S. v. De Tolna, D.C.N.Y., 288 F. 143.

"A federal court cannot set aside the judgment of a state court on the ground of extrinsic fraud."—Murrell v. Stock Growers' Nat. Bank of Cheyenne, C.C.A.Wyo., 74 F.2d 827, 830.

Final judgment only

(1) This rule applies only to final judgments.—Holyfield v. Guaranty Title & Trust Co., D.C.Tex., 22 F.Supp. 896.

(2) A judgment appointing temporary administrators is not final and cannot be set aside by the federal courts on the ground of fraud, notwithstanding its power as court of equity to relieve against such a judgment.—Smith v. Jennings, Ga., 238 F. 48, 151 C.C.A. 124, reversing, D.C., Jennings v. Smith, 232 F. 921, certiorari denied 37 S.Ct. 399, 243 U.S. 635, 61 L.Ed. 940.

cause to the federal court may be dissolved by the latter court.³⁹ In a proper case, a federal court may also allow an equitable set-off against a state court judgment;⁴⁰ and it may, in an action to quiet title to real property or to remove a cloud therefrom, inquire into the jurisdiction of a state court to render a judgment relied on by a party.⁴¹

Judicial sales. In accordance with the rules stated above, it has been held that a federal court has no jurisdiction to set aside a judicial sale made by a state court,⁴² except on the ground of fraud,⁴³ although it has been held otherwise in a case of land sold for taxes under order of a state court.⁴⁴

§ 539. — Jurisdiction of State Court with Respect to Federal Court

A state court may enforce a federal court judgment.

York, D.C.Wyo., 10 F.Supp. 960—Diamond v. Connolly, Idaho, 251 F. 234, 163 C.C.A. 390, certiorari denied 39 S.Ct. 7, 248 U.S. 561, 63 L.Ed. 422.

Reason for rule

"In such a case, the court does not act as one of review; neither does it consider irregularities occurring in the proceedings of the state court. It scrutinizes the conduct of the party obtaining the judgment and if it is found that he was guilty of fraud in securing it, he is deprived of its benefits. The action operates upon the party, not the judgment or decree of the state court. Such a case presents a new and different cause of action from that determined by the state court."—U. S. v. Mashunkashey, C.C.A.Okl., 72 F.2d 847, 851, rehearing denied 73 F.2d 487, certiorari denied Mashunkashey v. U. S., 55 S.Ct. 551, 294 U.S. 724, 79 L.Ed. 255.

Enjoining enjoyment of fruits of judgment

"In cases where it has jurisdiction the federal court may, on the ground of extrinsic fraud in obtaining a state court judgment, enjoin a party guilty of such fraud from enjoying the fruits of such judgment or compel him to surrender it."—Murrell v. Stock Growers' Nat. Bank of Cheyenne, C.C.A.Wyo., 74 F.2d 827, 830.

What constitutes extrinsic fraud

"Extrinsic fraud operates not upon matters pertaining to the judgment itself, but relates to the manner in which it is procured. Extrinsic fraud is any fraudulent conduct of the successful party which is practiced outside of an actual adversary trial, and which is practiced directly and affirmatively upon the defeated party, or his agents, attorneys or witnesses, whereby such defeated party is prevented from presenting fully and fairly his side of the case."—Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Jenkins, C.C.A.Ark., 91 F.2d 183, 187.

Intrinsic fraud or error

(1) Intrinsic fraud, as where the state court had before it the same issue of fraud, is not ground for equitable relief.—Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Jenkins, C.C.A.Ark., 91 F.2d 183.

(2) Intrinsic error, such as error in construing a will, unmixed with extrinsic fraud, is not ground for granting equitable relief.—Asher v. Bone, C.C.A.Idaho, 100 F.2d 815.

Newly discovered evidence, unmixed with extrinsic fraud, is not ground for equitable relief.—Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Jenkins, C.C.A.Ark., 91 F.2d 183.

Title fraudulently obtained

A federal court may relieve against a title fraudulently obtained in a state court, by enjoining the assertion of such title.—Robb v. Vos, C.C.Ohio, 36 F. 132, affirmed 15 S.Ct. 4, 155 U.S. 13, 39 L.Ed. 52.

While ordinarily it may not review, annul, or modify such judgment, or interfere with its execution, it may grant relief where the judgment was procured by fraud.

A state court may take jurisdiction of a proceeding to enforce a judgment rendered by a federal court,⁴⁵ and also, in some cases, of proceedings with respect to a title asserted under a judgment or execution sale of a federal court;⁴⁶ and a state court has been held to have jurisdiction to look into the proceeding of an officer of a federal court subsequent to the judgment.⁴⁷

§ 540. Suspension of Proceedings

The suspension by a state or federal court of its own proceedings because of the pendency of an action in the other court is considered in the title Actions § 133 c (7), and the power of a state or federal court to enjoin or restrain proceedings in the other court, in §§ 542-543 infra. The effect of a proceeding in the federal court to limit a shipowner's liability, as staying state court proceedings on claims against such owner, or as giving the federal court the right to enjoin such proceedings, is considered in the C.J.S. title Shipping § 251, also 58 C.J. p 669 note 28—p 671 note 47.

§ 541. Injunction against Proceedings in Another Court

One will not be enjoined from proceeding with a pending equity suit in a court of another jurisdiction, state, or federal, except to prevent manifest wrong, or unless it clearly appears that full relief cannot be obtained in such suit.

It is the general rule that one will not be restrained by injunction from proceeding with a pending suit in equity in a court of another jurisdiction, whether state or federal, except to prevent a manifest wrong or injustice, or unless it clearly appears that full and complete relief cannot be obtained in such pending suit.⁵¹ More specifically, whether a state court can or will enjoin proceedings in a federal court is considered in § 542 infra, and whether a federal court can or will enjoin proceedings in a state court, in § 543 infra.

§ 542. — By State Court against Proceedings in Federal Court

Except where it may be necessary to protect its own prior acquired jurisdiction, and with some other exceptions, a state court generally cannot or will not enjoin the institution or prosecution of an action in a federal court, or the enforcement of such court's judgments.

Except as appears below, a state court generally cannot or will not enjoin the institution or prosecution of an action in a federal court,⁵² particularly where the federal court has obtained jurisdiction of the parties to, and the subject matter of, the controversy;⁵³ nor can the enforcement of a judgment rendered by a federal court in such a case be enjoined by a state court.⁵⁴

There may, however, be circumstances under which the right to enjoin may exist.⁵⁵ Thus, a state court which has first acquired jurisdiction of a controversy may enjoin the prosecution of a proceeding in a federal court where, and in so far as, that proceeding will impair or defeat the pro-should not be brought in a state court.—Sproehle v. Dietrich, 110 Ill. 202.

Executory order

Only the court issuing an order can enjoin an alleged violation thereof while it is executory; thus, no other court, state or federal, has jurisdiction to enjoin an alleged violation of an executory order of a federal district court.—Woods v. Root, Ill., 123 F. 402, 59 C.C.A. 206—15 C.J. p 1176 note 9.

Unfair settlement of minor's suit

Where federal court entered judgment on an unfair settlement of a minor's suit without investigating its fairness, and there was no adequate remedy at law, a state court of equity will set aside the judgment.—Moebius v. McCracken, 246 N.W. 163, 261 Mich. 409.

Action under Federal Employers' Liability Act

(1) A state court has been held to have no power to enjoin a citizen of the state from prosecuting an action in a federal district court of another state pursuant to the Federal Employers' Liability Act.—McConnell v. Thomson, Ind., 8 N.E.2d 986, 113 A.L.R. 1429, rehearing denied 11 N.E.2d 183, 113 A.L.R. 1429.

(2) This is so even though a state statute authorizes such injunction.—Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Schendel, C.C.A.Minn., 293 F. 326.

(3) Neither can a state court consider the merits of a cause so begun.—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Barry, 87 Pa.L.J. 351.

ceeding before the state court;⁵⁶ for example, a state court which first acquired jurisdiction of the res in an action in rem may enjoin prosecution of an action involving the same res in a federal court,⁵⁷ at least in so far as that action would prejudice the state court proceeding.⁵⁸

Moreover, the enforcement of a judgment of a federal court may be enjoined by a state court where the judgment was obtained by fraud,⁵⁹ or where it is sought to seize⁶⁰ or to sell⁶¹ the property of a third person under execution on a judgment in a federal court; and a state court may enjoin the prosecution of an action before a federal court where such action is unconscionable or inequitable,⁶² as where the action in the federal court is at law and the petitioner has an equitable defense.⁶³

The fact that, by federal enactment, only the federal courts have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside the orders of the interstate commerce commission does not deprive the state court of jurisdiction to enjoin the performance of certain acts by a railroad receiver where such injunction does not interfere with the orders of the commission.⁶⁴

§ 543. — By Federal Court against Proceedings in State Court

- a. In general
- b. Limitations of, and exceptions to, rule

a. In General

Under, or without reference to, a statute so providing, a federal court generally, but with numerous exceptions, cannot enjoin or restrain proceedings in a state court. The statutory prohibition applies to all steps in actions in the state court, including enforcement of judgments, and to orders which necessarily, although indirectly, stay proceedings, such as restraints directed against the parties.

Under, or without reference to, § 265 of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C.A. § 379, prohibiting any court of the United States from granting an injunction to stay proceedings in any state court, except where authorized by laws relating to bankruptcy proceedings, a federal court generally, but with numerous exceptions appearing in subdivision b of this section, cannot enjoin or restrain proceedings in a state court,⁶⁵ and the state court cannot be deprived of its previously acquired jurisdiction by the federal court's injunction in violation of this Injunction by bankruptcy courts see title Bankruptcy § 143.

This provision means that, "except as may be authorized by laws relating to proceedings in bankruptcy, the powers of federal courts to stay proceedings in a state court are no greater than those with which state courts are invested under the general rules of the equity practice."—City of Norwalk, Ohio, v. Equitable Trust Co. of New York, C.C.A.Ohio, 63 F.2d 911, 912, certiorari granted Chase Nat. Bank of New York v. City of Norwalk, Ohio, 54 S.Ct. 73, 290 U.S. 614, 78 L.Ed. 537, reversed on other grounds Chase Nat. Bank v. City of Norwalk, Ohio, 51 S.Ct. 475, 291 U.S. 431, 78 L.Ed. 894.

Fear of erroneous decision

(1) A federal court will not enjoin the prosecution of an action in a state court merely because that court might render an erroneous decision, since it will be presumed that the court will properly decide the case, and since, if the decision is erroneous, it may be reviewed on appeal.—American Engineering Co. v. Metropolitan By-Products Co., D.C.N.Y., 3 F.2d 451.

(2) This is so even where the construction of a federal statute is involved, since in such case the decision may eventually be reviewed by the federal supreme court.—U. S. v. Dewar, D.C.Nev., 18 F.Supp. 931.

(3) Whether a particular person is a necessary party, and was not made a party, is an issue for state court, subject to right of appeal, and federal court could not assume that state court would erroneously decide issue.—U. S. v. Dewar, supra.

Denial of constitutional rights in the state court proceeding does not relieve the federal court from the operation of the statutory prohibition, since other methods have been provided for review of proceedings denying constitutional rights.—Essanay Film Mfg. Co. v. Kane, N.J., 42 S.Ct. 318, 258 U.S. 358, 66 L.Ed. 658, affirming, C.C.A., 264 F. 959, which affirmed, D.C., 256 F. 271.

A state court's failure to give full faith and credit to a decision of a federal court cannot be corrected by federal court's enjoining prosecution of the state court suit, the remedy being by appeal from state court's decision.—Bryant v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 92 F.2d 569.

Incidental federal question

The mere fact that a federal question is incidentally, but not directly, involved in the state court suit does not authorize the federal court to enjoin its prosecution.—Detroit, M. & T. S. L. Ry. v. City of Monroe, D.C.Mich., 262 F. 177.

The statute prevents privies to a state court proceeding, as well as parties of record, from seeking to enjoin such proceeding.—Hill v. Martin, N.J., 56 S.Ct. 278, 296 U.S. 393, 80 L.Ed. 293, affirming, D.C., Dorrance v. Martin, 12 F.Supp. 746.

Declaratory judgment act

(1) A declaratory judgment act does not set aside this statute.—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Alexander, Inc., D.C.Tex., 23 F.Supp. 807.

(2) As modifying this statute see infra subdivision b.

District of Columbia courts are courts of the United States within the statute.—Harlan v. Harlan, 281 F. 602, 52 App.D.C. 93, modified on other grounds 44 S.Ct. 135, 263 U.S. 681, 68 L.Ed. 504—Hyattsville Bldg. Assoc. v. Boule, 44 App.D.C. 408.

Prior jurisdiction over res; federal court receiver

(1) Where a state court first acquired jurisdiction of the res involved in an action, the federal court could not enjoin such action.—Hershey v. First Nat. Bank & Trust Co. in Waynesboro, D.C.Pa., 22 F.Supp. 517.

(2) This is also true where the federal court, subsequent to the state court's acquisition of jurisdiction, appointed a receiver to administer the property.—Ke-Sun Oil Co. v. Hamilton, C.C.A.Mont., 61 F.2d 215, 85 A.L.R. 204—Lydick v. Neville, C.C.A.Neb., 287 F. 479—Dey v. Brenack Stevedoring Co., D.C.N.Y., 272 F. 127.

(3) However, the federal court may authorize its receiver to apply to the state court for a stay.—Dey v. Brenack Stevedoring Co., supra.

(4) Where a subscriber to stock of a corporation in part payment for which he gave his negotiable note, brought an action in a state court to recover the amount paid, including that represented by the note, on the ground that his subscription was obtained by fraud, the fact that a receiver for the corporation, later appointed by a federal court, had possession of the note, did not authorize that court to enjoin the action in the state court, but the receiver might appear and defend the state action, and if defeated, surrender the note in reduction of the recovery.—Lydick v. Neville, supra.

Winding up of national bank by comptroller held not "proceedings in bankruptcy," within statutory exception.—Lehman v. Spurway, C.C.A. Fla., 58 F.2d 227, certiorari denied Spurway v. Lehman, 53 S.Ct. 20, 287 U.S. 621, 77 L.Ed. 539.

Stay pending appeal

The doctrine that a court may stay proceedings pending an appeal from a judgment dissolving a temporary injunction, although the court may be of opinion that the parties securing the injunction may not eventually prevail, cannot be invoked as against the statutory prohibition.—Marblehead Land Co. v. Los Angeles County, D.C.Cal., 276 F. 305.

Property in state court's custody

Federal court could not, by issuing injunction against state court proceedings, acquire jurisdiction over property already rightfully in custody of state court under attachment therein; and, even if it did acquire some right or power over the property by the temporary injunction, that power or right was lost when the injunction was dissolved by final decree.—Raphael v. Monroe, C.C.A. Mass., 66 F.2d 16, certiorari granted Munroe v. Raphael, 53 S.Ct. 117, 237 U.S. 591, 77 L.Ed. 516, reversed on other grounds 53 S.Ct. 424, 288 U.S. 435, 77 L.Ed. 910.

The rule first stated above has been applied to various types of actions in state courts,⁷⁰ and the prohibition, as embodied in the statute or as other-

Attempt to review state court decision

A suit for such injunction would be an attempt to have reviewed in a federal court a decision of the state court.—Ritholz v. North Carolina State Board of Examiners in Optometry, D.C.N.C., 18 F.Supp. 409.

prohibition extends not only to orders which directly restrain proceedings in the state court, but also to all orders which necessarily have that effect,⁷³ such as an injunction directed against the acts of a receiver appointed by a state court,⁷⁴ or against a sheriff to require him to disregard the orders of a state court as to execution of its process,⁷⁵ or against the parties to an action in a state court, rather than to the court or its officers.⁷⁶ The prohibition does not, however, prevent a federal court from enjoining state officers from instituting suits to enforce an unconstitutional statute,⁷⁷ or from enjoining one not a party to the state court proceeding from seeking to induce enforcement of the state court's judgment, even though it was the purpose or hope of the petitioner in the federal court thereby to induce the state officials to refrain from enforcing the state court judgment until adjudication of the federal court suit;⁷⁸ and a successful mandamus proceeding in the state court against state officials, to enforce a challenged statute, does not bar injunctive relief in a federal court against such enforcement at the suit of strangers to the mandamus proceeding, since they are not bound thereby.⁷⁹

Criminal proceedings in state court. In accordance with the general rule stated above, a federal court cannot restrain a criminal proceeding in a state court,⁸⁰ or the enforcement of a conviction therein,⁸¹ except where the effect of a statute is to permit such restraint,⁸² or where justice or the Injunction against enforcement of judgment lien is in effect injunction against state court suit, and is prohibited.—*Newberry v. Writ in aid of judgment

Where a state court has issued a writ in aid of its judgment, the federal court will not enjoin acts performed pursuant to such writ, the orderly procedure being to move the state court to have the writ recalled if improperly issued.—*Marblehead Land Co. v. Restraint on performance of acts ordered by state court

(1) An order enjoining one from performing acts which he has been ordered to perform by a mandamus by a state court is within the statutory prohibition.—Reisler v. Forsyth, D.C.N.J., 21 F.Supp. 610.

(2) A federal court cannot enjoin the receipt of property by a person as directed by a state court.—Domestic & Foreign Missionary Soc. v. Hinman, C.C.Neb., 13 F. 161, 2 McCrary 543.—Hutchinson v. Green, C.C.Mo., 6 F. 333, 2 McCrary 471.

An injunction against enforcing a statute, where the only steps taken to enforce it were by proceedings in the state court, is equivalent to injunction against enforcement of the state court's judgment, and is within the statutory prohibition.—Ritholz v. North Carolina State Board of Ex-

Grazing sheep on cattle range

Plaintiff who had been charged in state court with offense of grazing sheep on cattle range in violation of Idaho statute was not entitled, even if there had been no statutory prohibition, to maintain suit to enjoin further prosecution in criminal action pending in state court, on ground that Idaho statute had been abrogated by federal grazing act in so far as it affected grazing of live stock on public lands included within grazing district, since state court was competent to deal with federal question involved, which was subject to ultimate review in supreme court.—*Babcock v. 82. Habeas corpus proceeding

Under statute providing that pending appeal to the circuit court of appeals in a habeas corpus proceeding any proceeding against the relator in righteous demands of the superior sovereignty so require.⁸³ While the federal court has the power to enjoin state officers from instituting criminal actions,⁸⁴ since neither the state court nor the grand jury is thereby enjoined,⁸⁵ it will not do so except under extraordinary circumstances, as where the danger of irreparable property loss is great and immediate,⁸⁶ or to prevent a multiplicity of suits.⁸⁷ It will not, however, enjoin the court trying the criminal proceeding.⁸⁸

b. Limitations of, and Exceptions to, Rule

The rule and statute prohibiting the federal courts from enjoining state court proceedings do not, as a general rule, prevent a federal court which is properly vested with jurisdiction of a particular matter from acting in aid and in furtherance of such jurisdiction by enjoining proceedings which would have the effect of defeating or impairing such jurisdiction, or from depriving a party, by injunction, of the benefit of a final judgment obtained in a state court in circumstances where its enforcement would be contrary to recognized principles of equity and good conscience; nor does the statute prevent the restraining of nonjudicial proceedings.

By judicial construction, various exceptions and limitations have been engrafted on Judicial Code § 265, 28 U.S.C.A. § 379, which, as appears in subdivision a of this section, supra, prohibits any court of the United States from granting an injunction to stay proceedings in any state court, except where authorized by laws relating to bankruptcy proceedings.⁸⁹ Broadly speaking, this statute is not regarded as depriving federal courts of their jurisdiction in a proper case to enjoin or restrain state court proceedings, but merely as going to the equity of the particular bill, making it the duty of the court to determine whether the specific case presented is or is not within the prohibition.⁹⁰ The grant of particular jurisdiction to the federal courts includes the power and duty to protect such jurisdiction,⁹¹ and the prohibition of Judicial Code § 265 must be construed in connection with, and is limited by, § 262, 28 U.S.C.A. § 377, which authorizes the federal courts to issue all writs, not specifically provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their jurisdictions, and are agreeable to law.⁹²

the state court shall be void, it was proper, on motion pending relator's appeal for the circuit court of appeals to make a restraining order preserving existing conditions until it could hear and decide whether it has, and the court had, jurisdiction of such proceeding.—U. More assertion of unconstitutionality of the state law is not sufficient basis for request to enjoin criminal prosecution under alleged unconstitutional enactment.—Pughe v. Patton, D.C.Tex., 21 F.Supp. 182.

Absence of impediment to defense

The federal court will not interfere with prosecutions in the state courts, where there is no impediment interposed to the raising in those prosecutions of any defense which accused may have, or may think he has, under the constitution of the United States; and a stipulation by accused not to engage in the illegal practice of medicine, entered in a prior prosecution for that offense, would not preclude accused from attacking the state statute as contrary to the United States constitution in a subsequent prosecution, and so such stipulation is not ground for injunction by the United States courts against prosecutions.—Lindsey v. Allen, D.C.Mass., 269 F. 658, appeal dismissed 42 S.Ct. 462, 258 U.S. 613, 66 L.Ed. 791.

Accordingly, while the power should be exercised only in cases presenting an actual necessity,⁹³ as a general rule, both in the application of the statute and apart therefrom, federal courts properly exercising jurisdiction of particular matters, as in a case of exclusive jurisdiction, are regarded as having power to aid and further their jurisdiction by enjoining or restraining proceedings in a state court which would have the effect of defeating or impairing it;⁹⁴ and in such case it may enjoin the state court proceedings before judgment as well as afterward.⁹⁵ So, the granting of an injunction is permissible where such action by the feder-

Rights of United States

(1) Where the federal court has acquired exclusive jurisdiction of an action involving the rights of the United States as a party, it may enjoin proceedings in the state courts affecting such rights.—Babcock v. U. S., C.C.A.Ind., 9 F.2d 905, modifying, D.C., U. S. v. Babcock, 6 F.2d 160—U. S. v. Dewar, D.C.Nev., 18 F.Supp. 981—U. S. v. Inaba, D.C.Wash., 291 F. 416.

(2) However, a state court proceeding may not be enjoined on such ground where the rights of the United States are not in fact involved and need not be protected in such manner.—U. S. v. Dewar, D.C.Nev., 18 F.Supp. 981.

(3) Also, while the United States, in a proceeding under the Anti-Trust Act might be entitled to an injunction against the enforcement of a state court judgment, such an injunction will not be granted at the instance of a private party for its own advantage.—Buckeye Coal & Ry. Co. v. Hocking Valley Ry. Co., Ohio, 46 S.Ct. 61, 269 U.S. 42, 70 L.Ed. 155.

Enforcement of commission's orders

In an action brought to enforce orders of the interstate commerce commission with respect to the transfer of railroad property, the court could enjoin the parties from circumventing the commission's orders even though the effect would be to stay suits brought in the state courts to effect the end prohibited by the orders.—Miller v. Climax Molybdenum Co., C.C.A.Colo., 96 F.2d 254.

Proceedings not impairing jurisdiction

(1) Where prosecution of state court suit does not interfere with subject matter in possession of federal court or impair federal court's jurisdiction, injunction against such suit cannot be obtained.—Allen v. American Fidelity & Casualty Co., C.C.A.Tex., 80 F.2d 458—Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. McAden, D.C.Tex., 21 F.Supp. 110.

(2) This is the rule even without the prohibition of the statute.—Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Yeatts, C. C.A.Va., 99 F.2d 665.

Federal court without jurisdiction

"A federal court may sometimes enjoin proceedings in a state court to protect its own jurisdiction lawfully acquired, but may not interfere even temporarily when it has none."—Schell v. Food Machinery Corporation, C.C.A.Fla., 87 F.2d 385, 387, certiorari denied Food Machinery Corporation v. Schell, 57 S.Ct. 670, 300 U.S. 679, 81 L.Ed. 833.

Protecting jurisdiction of territorial court

A newly created federal district court, which, by act of congress, assumed jurisdiction over some of the cases pending in the territorial court which had previously existed in the district, is distinct from the territorial court, and cannot enjoin a state court proceeding in order to protect the jurisdiction and judgments of the territorial court.—Sand Springs Home v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., C.C.A.Okl., 16 F.2d 917.

95. U.S.—Sand Springs Home v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., supra. Enjoining enforcement of judgment see infra this section.

al court is necessary to protect or render effective a judgment or decree of such court.⁹⁶

It also follows that the prohibition of the statute or rule is inapplicable where a federal court has been vested with priority of jurisdiction over the subject matter and parties, and in order to protect its jurisdiction it is necessary to enjoin the proceeding in the state court,⁹⁷ at least where the

Independent or ancillary proceeding

(1) Federal court may entertain ancillary bill to enjoin proceedings in state court affecting decree.—Fiske v. State of Missouri, C.C.A.Mo., 62 F.2d 150, certiorari granted State of Missouri v. Fiske, 53 S.Ct. 696, 289 U.S. 720, 77 L.Ed. 1471, reversed on other grounds 54 S.Ct. 18, 290 U.S. 18, 78 L.Ed. 145—American Surety Co. of New York v. Baldwin, D.C. Idaho, 2 F.Supp. 679—Wilson v. Alexander, C.C.A.Tex., 276 F. 875.

(2) Whether suit to enjoin state court action involving matter previously adjudicated in federal court be deemed an independent action or one ancillary to former suit, federal court could treat it as ancillary, assert its jurisdiction, and preserve integrity of its judgment.—Hickey v. Johnson, C.C.A.Okl., 9 F.2d 498, mandamus granted on other grounds Hickey v. Williams, 22 F.2d 787.

Where title acquired under decree in federal court is attacked in an action in the state court, the text rule applies.—Bryant v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 92 F.2d 569—Hickey v. Johnson, C.C.A.Okl., 9 F.2d 498, mandamus granted

National Bank of Commerce in St. Louis, C.C.A.Mo., 282 F. 100.

Jurisdiction reserved by decree

Where final decree in a proceeding in federal court retained sole jurisdiction to determine certain claims, an action thereon in the state court can be enjoined by the federal court.—Smith v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 266 F. 653.

After termination of receivership in federal court, that court had jurisdiction to enjoin parties from maintaining a suit in the state court to relitigate matters determined in the receivership suit, although the suit in the state court was in personam and did not involve any lien on property under the dominion of the federal court.—Bethke v. Grayburg Oil Co., C.C.A.Tex., 89 F.2d 536, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 54, 302 U.S. 730, 82 L.Ed. 564.

Decree held not attacked

Suit in state court by bondholders against purchaser at mortgage foreclosure sale in federal court, to impress trust on property, was not enjoinable as attack on federal court's decree.—Magid v. Westmoreland, D.C.Ga., 15 F.2d 884, affirmed, C.C.A., 15 F.2d 885.

Priority and retention of jurisdiction see supra § 529.

Reason for rule

"Otherwise, after suit brought in a federal court, a party defendant could, by resorting to a suit in a state court, defeat, in many ways, the effective jurisdiction and action of the federal court, after it had obtained full jurisdiction of person and subject-matter."—Fisk v. Union Pac. R. Co., C.C.N.Y., 9 F.Cas.No.4,830, 10 Blatchf. 518, 520.

Corpus Juris cited in support of proposition that federal court first acquiring jurisdiction will retain it as against other courts.—Reconstruction Finance Corporation v. Zimmerman, C.C.A.S.C., 76 F.2d 313, 316.

Enjoining enforcement of state court order

Federal court may enjoin enforcement of order of state court restraining defendant therein from appearing as witness in federal action where federal court had first acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter.—Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Schendel, C.C.A.Minn., 292 F. 326.

When jurisdiction first acquired

Federal equity court, first acquiring jurisdiction of cause by filing of bill, may enjoin proceeding at law in state court, although latter's process was first served.—Brown v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.S.C., 62 F.2d 711.

Text rule recognized but held not to apply

(1) Where federal court had not acquired prior jurisdiction.—Puget Sound Power & Light Co. v. Asia, C. C.A.Wash., 277 F. 1, certiorari denied 42 S.Ct. 272, 258 U.S. 619, 66 L. Ed. 794.

(2) Where although the res involved in both actions had been deposited with the federal court, the state court had first acquired jurisdiction of the parties and subject matter with ample power to control state court suit would affect the control, possession, or disposition of the res by the federal court.⁹⁸ It is frequently held that this exception to the prohibition applies only where the federal court action is one in rem and custody of the res is disturbed by the proceedings in the state court, and that where both actions are in personam there is no interference warranting an injunction;⁹⁹ but there the disposition of the res.—Harlan v. Harlan, 281 F. 602, 52 App.D.C. 98 modified on other grounds 44 S.Ct. 135, 263 U.S. 681, 68 L.Ed. 504.

(3) Where the state court suit would not interfere with the jurisdiction of the federal court with respect to the matter before it.—Chancey v. Bauer, C.C.A.Fla., 97 F.2d 293, rehearing denied 97 F.2d 994—Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Fox Theaters Corporation, C.C.A.N.Y., 69 F.2d 60, 91 A.L.R. 991—*Raphael v. (4) Where property administered by a receiver appointed by federal court had been sold, and the receiver discharged, the federal court would not enjoin execution of judgment lien of state court against the property in the hands of the purchaser.—International-Great Northern R. Co. v. Adkins, C.C.A.Tex., 18 F.2d 481, affirming, D.C., International & G. N. R. Co. v. Adkins, 14 F.2d 149, and certiorari denied *International & G. N. R. Co. v. S.C.—Marchant v. Wannamaker, 180 S.E. 350.

Interference with receivership

(1) With respect to suit in state court for wrongs of receiver appointed by federal court, generally there will be no injunction by federal court unless state court action threatens to interfere with control of functions of federal receivership, which involves such matters as title, possession, means, and methods of administration, liquidation, establishment of relative equities, and time and manner of distribution.—McGreavey v. Straw, N.H., 5 A.2d 270.

(2) Enforcement of judgment of state court docketed after appointment by federal court of receiver for debtor's property may be restrained by the federal court to protect its prior jurisdiction over the res.—Davis v. Seneca Falls Mfg. Co., D.C.N.Y., 8 F.2d 546, modified on other grounds, C.C.A., 17 F.2d 546.

Enforcing bond

Federal court retained control over manner of enforcing bond given for protection of all creditors by one purchasing assets in receivership proceeding, and therefore had jurisdiction to restrain single creditor's proceedings on bond in state court.—Munroe v. Raphael, 53 S.Ct. 424, 288 U.S. 485, 77 L.Ed. 910, reversing, C.C.A., Raphael v. Monroe, 60 F.2d 16, certiorari granted Munroe v. Raphael, 53 S.Ct. 117, 287 U.S. 591, 77 L.Ed. 516.

Apparently so holding Young v. Standard Oil Co., D.C.Cal., 35 F.2d 551.

"The rank and authority of the [federal and state] courts are equal, but both courts cannot possess or control the same thing at the same time, and any attempt to do so would result in unseemly conflict. The rule, therefore, that the court first acquiring jurisdiction shall proceed without interference from a court of the other jurisdiction is a rule of right and of law based upon necessity, and where the necessity, actual or potential does not exist, the rule does not apply. Since that necessity does exist in actions in rem, and does not exist in actions in personam, involving a question of personal liability only, the rule applies in the former, but does not apply in the latter."—Kline v. Burke Const. Co., Ark., 43 S.Ct. 79, 83, 260 U.S. 226, 57 L.Ed. 226, 24 A.L.R. 1077, reversing, C.C.A., Burke Const. Co. v. Kline, 271 F. 605.

Actual or potential control

Exception to federal court's lack of power to enjoin pending proceeding in state court is based, on actual or potential power of a res.—Sansbury v. Koss, D.C.N.Y., 10 F. Supp. 477.

Suit to cancel policy

Suit brought in federal court to cancel insurance policy containing incontestable clause on ground of fraud of insured was "action in personam," as distinguished from "action in rem," and hence defendant could not be enjoined from prosecuting subsequently instituted action in state court to recover on policy.—Harnischfeger Sales Corporation v. National Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.Wis., 72 F.2d 921, distinguishing Drown v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.S.C., 62 F.2d 711 on difference in facts.

Action asserting rates confiscatory

Action by telephone company against director of public works, supervisor of public utilities, and others, asserting rates were confiscatory, was proceeding in rem, and not in personam, within text rule.—Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Star Pub. Co., D.C.Wash., 2 F.2d 151.

Suits not disturbing custody

(1) The federal court may not enjoin suits to declare the rights of claimants to a res in its custody if such suits do not and cannot disturb its custody.—Bryant v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 92 F.2d 569.

(2) So, the pendency in a state court of an action in personam which involves no claim to, or lien on, specific property in the possession of the federal court, and no issue of which that court has acquired exclusive jurisdiction, presents no ground for a dependent bill to stay it.

U.S.—Riehle v. Margolies, N.Y., 49 S.Ct. 310, 279 U.S. 218, 73 L.Ed. 669—Holmes County, Miss. v. Burton Const. Co., C.C.A.Miss., 272 F. 565—In re Sugar Products Co., D.C.N.Y., 247 F. 623.

is some authority upholding the right of a federal court of equity to enjoin proceedings at law in the state courts impairing the jurisdiction assumed notwithstanding that both actions are in personam.¹

The prohibition of the statute is subject to the further exception that the federal court may in a proper case issue an injunction where the state court is without jurisdiction.² Also, where the elements of federal and equity jurisdiction are present, the federal courts may enjoin the institution of proceedings to enforce local statutes and regulations which are repugnant to the federal constitution,³ and it has been broadly said that where such a question is involved, an exception to the statutory prohibition exists permitting a federal court of equity to intervene in state court proceedings.⁴ Of course, injunctive relief which does not interfere with the action of a state court may be granted by a federal court.⁵

Where an injunction is necessary and proper, as to protect the first acquired jurisdiction of the federal court, it should ordinarily be directed to the parties and not to the judge of the state court.⁶

Effect of removal of cause. It is generally held that the prohibition against injunction does not apply where a cause is properly removed from a state court to a federal court, and that the latter court may protect the exclusive jurisdiction thereby acquired by enjoining subsequent proceedings in the cause in the state court,⁷ the issuance of the injunc-

Kline*, 271 F. 605] we find nothing in it which limits to actions in rem the right of a federal court of equity, to protect its jurisdiction. It involved no situation where it was necessary for a court of equity to protect against encroachment on its jurisdiction or the lawful effect of its orders and decrees, but merely one where independent proceedings were pending in the state and federal courts, in both of which the ultimate relief sought was a money judgment."—*Brown v. Injunction by statutory court

(1) Under Judicial Code § 266, 28 U.S.C.A. § 380, providing that only a specially constituted court shall issue interlocutory injunctions against the enforcement of state statutes on the ground of their unconstitutionality, and that such injunctions shall be stayed if a stay against the enforcement of the statute is granted in a state court, a federal court cannot deprive a state court of competent jurisdiction of the power to hear an action for enforcement of a state statute on the merits where application is made in such suit for a stay of other proceedings to enforce the statute.—Michigan Public Utilities Commission v. Michigan State Telephone Co., 200 N.W. 749, 228 Mich. 658.

(2) However, the federal court injunction is not stayed by the state court proceeding where the state court has granted no stay of enforcement of the statute.—Interborough Rapid Transit Co. v. Gilchrist, D.C.N.Y., 25 F.2d 164, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 32 F.2d 1015.

Requisites to jurisdiction of injunction suit

Where a law action was removed from a state court to a federal court, the question of the latter's jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin plaintiff in the law action from proceeding further in the state court "resolved itself into three constituent questions: Did the court have jurisdiction of the parties? Did it have jurisdiction of the subject-matter? Did it have jurisdiction in the main—that is, the law-action?"—Dillinger v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 19 F.2d 196, 197.

Auxiliary proceeding

(1) The injunction is ordinarily granted in an equity proceeding ancillary to the action removed.—Madisonville Traction Co. v. St. Bernard Min. Co., Ky., 25 S.Ct. 251, 196 U.S. 239, 49 L.Ed. 462—Dillinger v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., C.C.A.Mo., 19 F.2d 196—Kolkin v. Gotham Sportswear, D.C.N.Y., 10 F.Supp. 682—*Donovan v. (2) The determination of whether a cause should be removed should be by the federal court having jurisdiction of the action at law, and not as a part of the injunction suit.—Donovan v. Wells, Fargo & Co., supra.

Subsequent separate action in state court

(1) Removal of action to federal court does not warrant federal court's granting injunction to restrain prosecution of a second action, based on a separate and distinct cause of action, in the state court.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cooper, C.C.Ga., 182 F. 710—15 C.J. p 1181 note 51 [b].

(2) Where action was removed to federal court, prosecution of second action on same cause of action, but for less than amount sufficient to give federal court jurisdiction, against foreign corporation and two of its officers, who were citizens of state where action was brought could not be enjoined by federal court.—Honolulu Oil Corporation v. Patrick, C.C.A.Cal., 71 F.2d 634.

In Porto Rico

Injunction not necessary

Cause not removable

The statutory prohibition against the granting by a federal court of an injunction to stay proceedings in a state court, cannot be evaded by the filing of removal papers by a defendant, and then by injunction staying further proceedings in the federal court, if the cause be in fact not removable.—*Higgins v. Injunction pending determination as to removal

(1) A federal court may, under several authorities, enjoin proceedings in the state court pending its determination of whether or not the cause is removable.

Danger of irreparable injury necessary

The acts of congress contemplate the issue of ex parte orders from a federal court to restrain the trial in a state court of a cause that is entitled to removal only when it appears that there is danger of irreparable injury from delay.—People v. Judge Detroit Super. Ct., 1 N.W. 955, 41 Mich. 31.

Decision on motion to remand prerequisite

Injunction will not ordinarily be granted before a motion to remand the cause has been decided, unless the right of removal is beyond dispute.—Sinclair v. Pierce, C.C.Mass., 50 F. 851.

Where petition for removal is held insufficient to warrant removal, the federal court will not enjoin the state court proceeding.—Daker v. Jacksonville Traction Co., D.C.Fla. 247 F. 718.

Inability to obtain transcript

Where plaintiff refused to file in the state court his pleadings, etc., seeking in that way to prevent removal of the cause to the federal court, as proper transcript could not be made up, the federal court may enjoin plaintiff from further proceedings in the cause; but, where plaintiff by stipulation agreed to a method of curing the deficiency, no injunction can be issued until the transcript has been filed and the cause removed.—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Feaster, D.C.S.C., 260 F. 881.

be directed to the parties, and not to the state court itself.¹²

As incident to equitable jurisdiction generally. Where a federal court has assumed jurisdiction of a suit based on some well recognized equitable ground, and the case is one which is appropriate for the exercise of equitable and injunctive powers of the court, it may enjoin proceedings in a state court which may have the effect of defeating or impairing the jurisdiction so assumed;¹³ and this is the case even though the state court proceedings were first instituted, if the remedy there available is inadequate.¹⁴ So the federal court may grant equitable relief involving the enjoining of suits at law in the state courts where the remedy at law is inadequate,¹⁵ or where the state court proceeding was brought only for vexatious or malicious purposes,¹⁶ or in order to prevent a person from being subjected to a multiplicity of suits.¹⁷

Co. of Philadelphia, 87 F.2d 253, certiorari denied 57 F.2d 753, 300 U.S. 683, 81 L.Ed. 886.

Limited relief

The statute does not deprive the federal court of jurisdiction of the subject matter of a suit seeking equitable relief against an action in the state court even though the court is prevented by the statute from granting complete relief, and it may grant such relief as is within its power.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Tompa, C.C.A.N.Y., 51 F.2d 1032.

Unfair use of processes of courts

A federal court may prevent a plaintiff from making an unfair use of the processes of courts of law to deprive complainants of rights which, under the facts alleged in the bill, the state court cannot adequately protect.—National Surety Co. v. State Bank of Humboldt, Neb., 120 F. 593, 600, 56 C.C.A. 657, 61 L. R.A. 394—15 C.J. p 1180 note 46.

Injunction depriving of jury trial

Injunctions by federal court of equity against prosecution of actions in state courts, which will deprive defendant of right to a jury trial, should not be granted without very substantial reasons therefor.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Stoner, C.C.A. Mo., 92 F.2d 845.

(2) A federal court of equity will not enjoin a state court proceeding on the ground that if the funds are permitted to go to defendant receivers they will be dissipated by the costs of the receivership, where there is no certainty that the same would not be true if the funds were turned over to plaintiffs, who are also receivers.—Phillips v. Noel Const. Co., 266 F. 603, 49 App.D.C. 379, certiorari denied 41 S.Ct. 7, 254 U.S. 631, 65 L.Ed. 447.

Practical inadequacy

"Something more than a theoretical inadequacy of legal remedy must exist in order to justify the issuance of an injunction. . . . It must be a practical inadequacy of remedy sufficient to justify a court of equity in exercising its jurisdiction in favor of a plaintiff whose rights will be substantially and adversely affected if such injunction is not granted."—Equitable Life Assur. Factors to be considered; requisite allegations

(1) In determining whether federal court of equity will so act, the factors to be considered are the real and substantial convenience of all parties, the adequacy of plaintiff's legal remedy, the situations of the different parties, the points to be contested and the result which will follow if jurisdiction is assumed or denied; and such suits will not be enjoined where the issues in the suits are not necessarily identical and rights of parties would be prejudiced.—Armour & Co. v. Haugen, supra.

(2) Although state court actions constituted a "multiplicity of suits," they will not be enjoined in absence of allegation that result of one trial in state court would not dispose of all cases or that state court was powerless to try all cases as one case.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Wert, C.C.A.Neb., 102 F.2d 10.

On the other hand, a federal court cannot grant equitable relief to restrain the prosecution of an action in the state courts where the complaining party could secure full and adequate relief in the state court proceedings.¹⁸

Enjoining enforcement of judgment. A federal court exercising equitable powers may deprive a party, by means of an injunction, of the benefit of a final judgment obtained in a state court in circumstances where its enforcement would be contrary to recognized principles of equity and the standards of good conscience, as where the judgment is void, or based on fraud, accident, or mistake, without fault or negligence of the complaining party.¹⁹ Indeed, there is authority broadly to

However, it has been said that the federal court may furnish equitable relief within its jurisdiction notwithstanding the party seeking to restrain prosecution of the state action has a remedy in the state court.—Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Tompa, C.C.A.N.Y., 51 F.2d 1032.

Federal judgment in bar

Suit brought by party failing to obtain judgment in law action in federal court, to relitigate same matter in state court under pretense of equitable action to reform, will not be enjoined by federal court, since defendant in such suit need only plead federal court judgment as bar.—Allon v. Fraud

(1) Party suing to enjoin enforcement of judgment fraudulently obtained in state court must show valid defense to cause of action on which judgment was rendered, that he was revented by extrinsic fraud, accident, mistake, concealment, or other chicanery from presenting such defense, and that he had not been negligent in availing himself of it.—McClaff v. Robbins, C.C.A.Kan., 81 F.2d 431, affirming, D.C., 14 F.Supp. 602, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 940, 298 U.S. 675, 80 L.Ed. 1397.

(2) It has been held that the federal courts will act only in the case of extrinsic or collateral fraud operating not on matters pertaining to the judgment itself, but with respect to the manner in which it was procured, as where it was practiced on a party so as to prevent him from making a full defense; the courts will not enjoin enforcement of a judgment on account of intrinsic fraud, practiced during the course of the trial, such as the use of forged instruments or perjured testimony, nor can they act on the ground of newly discovered evidence.—Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Jenkins, C.

C.A.Ark., 91 F.2d 183—McClaff v. Robbins, C.C.A.Kan., 81 F.2d 431, affirming, D.C., 14 F.Supp. 602, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 940, 298 U.S. 675, 80 L.Ed. 1397.

(3) A federal court may set aside a sale of the land of an infant, fraudulently made by his guardian under authority derived from a state court.—Arrowsmith v. Gleason, Ohio, 9 S.Ct. 237, 129 U.S. 86, 32 L.Ed. 630.

Remedy in state court

(1) Where federal court had jurisdiction of action to restrain enforcement of final judgment fraudulently or unlawfully obtained in a state court, it was error to deny relief on the ground that complainants had a right to petition in the state court to have the judgment set aside, since complainants were not confined to such remedy.—The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Marlboro Cotton Mills, C.C.A.S.C., 282 F. 811, modifying, D.C., 278 F. 816, certiorari denied Marlboro Cotton Mills v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 43 S.Ct. 248, 260 U.S. 749, 67 L.Ed. 494.

(2) However, it has been held that a bill to prevent enforcement of judgment on ground of fraud and perjured testimony is properly dismissed, where state supreme court, while asserting that it had power to order new trial, refused to do so.—American Bakeries Co. v. Vining, C.C.A.Fla., 80 F.2d 932, affirming, D.C., 13 F.Supp. 323.

Legal remedy held inadequate, requiring application of text rule.—Fetzer v. Johnson, C.C.A.Okl., 15 F.2d 145, certiorari denied Johnson v. Fetzer, 47 S.Ct. 456, 273 U.S. 751, 71 L.Ed. 873.

Equitable grounds for injunctive relief not shown

(1) Generally.—Superior Oil Corporation v. Matlock, C.C.A.Okl., 47 F.2d 993—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, D.C.N.Y., 13 F.2d 267, affirmed, C.C.A., 13 F.2d 268—American Bakeries Co. v. Vining, D.C.Fla., 13 F.Supp. 323, affirmed, C.C.A., 80 F.2d 932.

(2) As against objections that necessary party to action was missing, that there had been no adversary trial, and that the action was barred by the statute of limitations.—McClaff v. Robbins, C.C.A.Kan., 81 F.2d 431, affirming, D.C., 14 F.Supp. 602, the effect that, whatever may be the application of the prohibitory statute with respect to injunctions affecting actions in the state courts before final judgment therein, the statute does not prohibit the federal courts from acting in a proper case to enjoin the enforcement of a final judgment,²⁰ and that the prohibition of the statute does not extend to the issuance of an injunction against the enforcement of a judgment obtained in a state action where the prosecution of the state suit would be enjoined but for the statute.²¹ So, notwithstanding some authority apparently to the contrary,²² it is held that a federal court may restrain the execution of a state court judgment against the property of third person not a party to the judgment.²³ It has even been held that in a proper case the court need not wait until judgment in the state action is obtained, but may enjoin the enforcement of the judgment should one be obtained.²⁴

On the other hand, an injunction will not be granted where the only objection to the judgment of the state court is that it was erroneously decided,²⁵ or where no final decree capable of being enforced has been entered by the state court, but only an interlocutory decree.²⁶ Neither will enforcement of the judgment be enjoined where the fraud, accident, or mistake resulted in whole or in part from the fault or negligence of the complaining party.²⁷

Exercise of jurisdiction conferred by statute. Since the statute prohibiting the enjoining of state court proceedings is a mere limitation upon the general equity powers of the federal courts, it may be varied by congress to meet the requirements of

Federal court, on application for injunction to restrain proceedings, in state court, is concerned only with jurisdiction to appoint receiver, and not proper exercise thereof.—Clinton v. Coppedge, D.C.Okl., 2 F.Supp. 935.

Erroneous assumption of jurisdiction

Although state court judgment may be attacked in federal courts under due process clause for lack of notice, federal jurisdiction cannot be predicated on erroneous assumption of jurisdiction of subject matter by state court, where subject matter is defined by state law and notice and opportunity to raise judicial question are afforded in state courts.—*Lambert v. Remedy in state courts

(1) The remedy is by appeal in the state courts, and it will be assumed that state court will do justice and correct errors in exercise of jurisdiction, if any.—Clinton v. Coppedge, D.C.Okl., 2 F.Supp. 935.

(2) The text rule is especially applicable where judgment was affirmed by the state supreme court.—Wagner Electric Mfg. Co. v. Lyndon, C.C.A.Mo., 282 F. 219, certiorari denied 43 S.Ct. 361, 261 U.S. 614, 67 L.Ed. 827, and appeal dismissed 43 S.Ct. 589, 262 U.S. 226, 67 L.Ed. 961.

federal litigation.²⁸ So the Interpleader Act, Judicial Code § 24(26), 28 U.S.C.A. § 41 (26), which authorizes the enjoining of parties to the interpleader from further prosecuting any suits in any other courts on account of the property involved, has been held to modify the prohibition.²⁹ Also it appears that a federal court entertaining a proceeding under the Declaratory Judgment Act, Judicial Code § 274d, 28 U.S.C.A. § 400, may in a proper case enjoin a state court suit interfering with its jurisdiction over the matter;³⁰ but jurisdiction to grant such relief will not be assumed where a full and complete remedy exists in the state court.³¹

Interpleader by sureties

A former provision of the interpleader statute, merely authorizing the court in suits thereunder to issue "the necessary writs usual and customary in such cases" was, however, held not to authorize the court to enjoin state court proceedings as against the statutory prohibition of such injunctions.—Lowther v. New York Life Ins. Co., C.C.A.N.J., 278 F. 405.

30. U.S.—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Alexander, Inc., D.C.Tex., 23 F. Supp. 807.

Determining insurer's liability

(1) Federal court entertaining action by insurer for declaratory judgment as to its liability under policy may enjoin state court suit against insured on claim for which insurer might be liable, since issue of insurer's liability could not be properly tried in state action.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Tighe, D.C.Cal., 24 F.Supp., 49, appeal dismissed, C.C.A., Tighe v. Maryland Casualty Co., 99 F.2d 727—Standard Accident Ins. Co. v. Alexander, Inc., D.C.Tex., 23 F.Supp. 807.

(2) However, in similar circumstances, other authority, without mention of the text rule, has held that the state court proceedings could not be enjoined.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Consumers Finance Service of Pennsylvania, C.C.A.Pa., 101 F.2d 514, reversing, D.C., 23 F. Supp. 433—Glens Falls Indemnity Co. v. Brazen, D.C.Pa., 27 F.Supp. 582—Associated Indemnity Corporation v. Manning, D.C.Wash., 16 F. Supp. 430, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 92 F.2d 168.

(3) It has been indicated that the federal court could not enjoin the state court action because such action is one in personam for damages and in no wise interferes with the proceedings in the federal court to determine rights under the policy, and the fear of the insurer that it might be estopped from setting up the defense of noncoverage if it defends the state action is not sufficient reason for restraining such action.—Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. v. Yeatts, C.C.A.Va., 99 F.2d 665.

(4) So where the district court refused to adjudicate insurer's liability under double indemnity provision of life policies, it would not enjoin beneficiaries from instituting action at law to recover on policies pending review of decision by circuit court of appeals, since the state court action would be one in personam, seeking only a monetary judgment.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Roe, D.C.Ark., 22 F.Supp. 1000, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., 102 F.2d 28.

Approval of rates

It has been indicated that an action may be brought in a federal court to enjoin enforcement of rates approved by state courts where such approval is in an administrative, rather than in a judicial, capacity.—*Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Taxation

(1) Review by court of decree affirming tax assessment is a judicial proceeding within statute prohibiting administrative agencies of the state, without violating the prohibitory statute.³⁵

C. COURTS OF DIFFERENT STATES OR COUNTRIES

§ 544. Exclusive or Concurrent Jurisdiction in General

- a. In general
- b. Actions to construe wills

a. In General

The jurisdiction of the court of a state over actions which are local to such state is exclusive, but not so as to actions which are transitory in nature.

As may be seen in § 38 of this Title the jurisdiction of the courts of a state over actions which are local to such state is exclusive, while in regard to actions which are transitory in nature the courts of a state may assume jurisdiction thereof, even though such actions are based on acts done in another state or country.

It has been said to be well settled as a general proposition that actions involving title and possession of real property are in the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the state in which the realty is situated.³⁶ Thus the court of the state in which realty is located is the court in which should be litigated the question whether a vendor's lien exists against such property if no personal judgment is sought.³⁷ However, the rights and equities of the citizens of a state in property wherever located or under whatever laws acquired will be protected by the courts of such state when this may be injunction thereof, notwithstanding power of reviewing court to reverse or affirm the assessment in whole or in part, since such power does not necessarily imply an exercise of administrative discretion.—Hill v. Martin, N.J., 56 S.Ct. 278, 296 U.S. 393, 80 L.Ed. 293, affirming, D.C., Dorrance v. Martin, 12 F.Supp. 746—Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Martin, D.C.N.J., 19 F.Supp. 82.

(2) Where entry of judgment for taxes was purely an administrative duty prescribed by statute to effectuate tax lien after approval of assessment by board of tax appeals, federal court could issue injunctive orders against collection of tax.—Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Martin, D.C.N.J., 19 F.Supp. 84.

(2) A federal court has jurisdiction to enjoin enforcement of an order of a state public utilities commission notwithstanding no appeal from the order has been taken to the courts of the state, where the appellate function of the state courts with respect to such orders is judicial and not legislative and the order is considered complete when it became operative.—Columbia Ry., Gas & Electric Co. v. Blease, D.C.S.C., 42 F.2d 463—*U. S. Smelting, Refining & Mining Co. v. Lien based on fraud accomplished through process in person on adverse parties in the jurisdiction, and no foreign court has obtained jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties for the determination of such rights and equities.³⁸

Status. As is stated in Conflict of Laws § 14 b the law of the domicile governs and controls the status of individuals. Hence, a court will not yield to a foreign jurisdiction the exclusive right to determine the status of one of its residents when the determination of that question is affected by the welfare of both society and the individual members thereof,³⁹ and it has been said that ordinarily the courts of one state have no power to change the status of citizens of another state.⁴⁰

b. Actions to Construe Wills

Ordinarily the construction of a will in so far as it involves real estate is for the courts of the state in which the real estate is located, while in respect of personalty the construction of the will is for the courts of the testator's domicile.

The courts of a state in which land disposed of by will is situated alone have jurisdiction to construe the will in so far as it relates to the land so situated,⁴¹ since a judgment rendered by the courts of a state as to title to land situated without the state is a nullity.⁴² This rule has been held to apply, although the testator resided⁴³ or made the will⁴⁴ in a state other than that in which the land was situated. It has been also held, however, that the courts of a testator's domicile are justified in construing the will to determine its intent, although the devised realty be located in a foreign state.⁴⁵ A statute expressly authorizing an action to determine the validity and construction or effect of a will under the laws of the state of a testamentary disposition of land situated within it does not authorize an action to construe a will disposing of land situated within another state.⁴⁶

In the case of a will disposing of personal property, the courts of the state wherein the testator resided ordinarily have exclusive jurisdiction of a suit to construe the will, or that portion of it which disposes of the property, wherever it may be situated or found,⁴⁷ the court of a state in which the testator was domiciled having jurisdiction to construe the will with respect to personalty, even though a domiciliary administrator had been appointed in another state.⁴⁸ Although real and personal property are given by the same clause of the will, and on the same trust, they are severable, and the validity of the disposition as to one does not depend on that as to the other; and a suit to construe the will as regards its disposition of personal property must therefore be brought in the state where the testator resided at the time of his decease.⁴⁹

Where a person acting as executor in one state has, under order of court, transmitted all the estate in his hands as such executor to himself, acting as executor in another state, the courts of the former state have no jurisdiction of a suit in equity for the construction of the will, the executor having performed all his duties in that state, and being no longer accountable as executor there;⁵⁰ but the executor of a nonresident testator may bring an action for instructions in the court of another state, in which he has been granted ancillary letters testamentary, if the personal estate found in that state is sufficient for the payment of Contention that courts of Utah are precluded from construing a will because courts of California, where domiciliary administration is had, may place a construction thereon different from that given it by the courts of Utah is without merit.—In re Campbell's Estate, supra.

debts and legacies and the legatees are within the jurisdiction of the court.⁵¹

It has been held that, where a will executed in one state was admitted to probate in another state, and a substituted trustee, who was seeking a discharge, was appointed by the courts of the latter state, having charge of assets located there, and the lapse of time was so great as to remove any possibility that there were still creditors interested in the estate in the place of decedent's domicile, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, will assume jurisdiction to determine the validity of a bequest essential to final distribution by the substituted trustee.⁵²

§ 545. General Rules of Comity

Principles of comity have frequently been used to explain a court's taking of jurisdiction or rejecting it as to matters involving foreign laws.

The courts of a state are frequently called upon to ascertain the substantive law of another state or country and to enforce the same according to the remedial processes of the law of the forum,⁵³ courts having inherent power to furnish assistance, so far as is consistent with their own jurisdiction, to the courts of another state or country,⁵⁴ which power may be restricted or enlarged by statute.⁵⁵

In determining whether courts of different states or countries have exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction over particular matters, resort is frequently had by the courts to the doctrine of comity, discussed at length in Conflict of Laws §§ 3, 4. This doctrine is often used by the courts to explain their taking jurisdiction of particular causes and the extent to which they will act in so doing and also to explain their refusal to take jurisdiction.

It has been frequently reiterated that the extent to which the law of one state or country operates in another,⁵⁶ and whether a court of one state or country should permit an action based on foreign law to be maintained therein,⁵⁷ depend on comity, and except where the full faith and credit clause of the constitution is applicable this is a question exclusively for such court to determine.⁵⁸

Comity has been stated to be the recognition which one state or nation allows within its territory of the law of another, having due regard, both to international duty and convenience and to the rights of its own citizens or other persons who are under the protection of its laws,⁵⁹ and applied judicially it means the local enforcement in a suit of which the court has taken jurisdiction of laws of a foreign jurisdiction.⁶⁰ The doctrine applies ordinarily only to rights and does not embrace remedies,⁶¹ nor can right, but of deference and good will, while the latter imposes an obligation.⁶⁷

Under rules of comity, which are sometimes embodied in statutes,⁶⁸ except as there are statutory requirements to the contrary,⁶⁹ the courts of one state will recognize the proceedings of the courts of another state or country,⁷⁰ and the former will not assume, either directly or otherwise, any appellate jurisdiction over the latter.⁷¹ Thereunder such courts will enforce rights arising under the laws of, or in, other states or countries,⁷² some-

Basis of theory

The rule of comity is based on the theory that a court which first asserted jurisdiction will not be interfered with in the continuance of its assertion by another court of foreign jurisdiction until it is convenient and desirable that the one give way to the other, and is not a rule of law, but one of practice, convenience, and expediency.—*National Park Bank of New York v. Foreign law as defining rights and duties

No court enforces foreign law, but in adjusting rights of suitors, courts will impute to them rights and du-times even though no similar right exists in the state of the forum,⁷³ and usually even though a reciprocal right to sue is not accorded by the state whose law is being sought to be recognized or enforced,⁷⁴ although the contrary has been held in some jurisdictions with respect to this last.⁷⁵ Such recognition will not be accorded where so to do would be contrary to the laws or public policy,⁷⁶ or the sentiments of good morals or justice⁷⁷ of the state in which such enforcement is sought, or where such recognition would work injury on the state or citizens.⁷⁸ The employment of the rule of comity in a proper case is not considered as inimical to the interests of the citizens of the state.⁷⁹

Under comity, courts will entertain suits brought by citizens of other states⁸⁰ and where the person or property of a nonresident is within the jurisdiction of a state court, it may retain such jurisdiction for the purpose of administering justice to its own citizens.⁸¹ Comity, however, does not require that a court should accord to a litigant from another state any advantage over other litigants.⁸² The prosecution of transitory actions in a country other than that in which the cause of action arose is based on comity, so that, where under the lex loci no right of action exists, none can be enforced in the jurisdiction of suit;⁸³ and, where the courts of the state where a contract is made refuse to enforce such a contract, it will not ordinarily be enforced by the court of another state.⁸⁴ However, a court of one state, by rendering judgment in an action which would not be entertained in the state where the cause of action arose, does not thereby fail to give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of such other state.⁸⁵

A court of one state may decline to take jurisdiction of a controversy which is such that comity requires that it should be left to the determination of the courts of another state,⁸⁶ but comity does not require that it should be assumed by the courts of one state that those of another state are more competent to determine a case and do justice between the parties than are the courts of the state to whose jurisdiction the actor in the suit has voluntarily submitted it.⁸⁷

Effect of foreign process

The appropriate forum in which to test effect of alleged service of process, issued in action brought in court of foreign country, is in such court, and state court will not pass on question of such foreign court's jurisdiction.—Paramount Pictures v. Blumenthal, 11 N.Y.S.2d 768, 256 App. Div. 756.

15-C.J. p 1182 note 63.

A right of action created by statute providing an exclusive remedy for its enforcement will not be enforced in the courts of another state⁸⁸ by a different remedy.⁸⁹

A court of one state in construing an act of congress as to its effect on a contract made in another state is not compelled by comity to follow the construction which the court of the latter state has placed on such act,⁹⁰ nor can the doctrine of comity between states be invoked in aid of an award founded on the submission to arbitration of an illegal transaction.⁹¹ It has also been held that a court may exercise a jurisdiction which is ancillary to that of a court of another state, where an attempt is made by a litigant by trick or fraud to avoid service of process in the latter court which is that of his place of residence;⁹² but a court of one state is not authorized, by the comity between states, to collate advancements made by an intestate who had resided and died in another state to his children therein.⁹³

Where a liability is created only by the statutes of a state, the question of its enforcement is not one of comity but of the power of the courts of the forum.⁹⁴

§ 546. Election of Tribunal

Generally a litigant may in good faith select the forum for the trial of his action if it has jurisdiction of his cause and is competent to afford relief.

Generally a litigant may select the forum in which to seek relief provided the forum selected has jurisdiction of the action and is competent to afford relief,⁹⁵ and the motive for such selection is not ordinarily open to question, if the selection is in good faith. This is so even though the forum selected is not that of the adversary, and even though the litigant hopes to secure a preceudral advantage by his selection of a forum.⁹⁶

In § 76 of this Title is discussed the jurisdiction of the courts of a state over actions against non-residents.

§ 547. Constitutionality of Statute of Another State

While it has been asserted that the courts of a state may determine the constitutionality of a statute of another state under the latter's constitution, it has been denied that such courts may determine the validity of such a statute under the federal constitution.

The doctrine has been asserted that a court of one state may, when necessary to the decision of a cause within its jurisdiction, determine the question whether a statute of another state violates the constitution of that state.⁹⁷ On the other hand, the right of one state to determine whether a statute of another state is in conflict with the federal constitution has been denied.⁹⁸

The right of the courts of one state to construe the constitution and statutes of another state, is considered in § 204. In § 93 a of Constitutional Law the courts which may determine the constitutionality of statutes are discussed.

§ 548. Effect of Pendency of Action in Another State or Country

On the principle of comity a court of concurrent jurisdiction may refuse to take jurisdiction of a cause while

Different remedies provided

Where each of two states has provided for itself an exclusive remedy for a liability, which it was constitutionally authorized to impose, neither is bound, apart from the compulsion of the full faith and credit clause, to enforce the laws of the other, nor can the law of either by its own force determine the choice of law to be applied in the other.—*Pacific Employers Ins. a similar suit is pending between the same parties in another jurisdiction.

The pendency of an action in the courts of one state or country is not a bar to the institution of another action between the same parties and for the same cause of action in a court of another state or country,⁹⁹ nor is it the duty of the court in which the latter action is brought to stay the same pending a determination of the earlier action, even though the court in which the earlier action is brought has jurisdiction sufficient to dispose of the entire controversy.¹ Nevertheless, sometimes stated as a matter of comity, not of right,² it is usual for the court in which the later action is brought to stay proceedings under such circumstances until the earlier action is determined, see Actions § 133 c (6), and upon the same principle a court of one state may refuse to entertain jurisdiction where an action between the same parties involving the same controversy and subject matter is pending in a court of another state,³ and while this rule is based on comity it is also a rule of necessity.⁴ The court of one jurisdiction cannot presume that a court of another is incompetent to do justice in cas-

Claim against trust estate

In proceeding by commonwealth

against resident trustee, which was under control of New York court where administration proceedings were pending, to recover money expended by commonwealth on beneficiary, who was an inmate of hospital for mentally diseased in commonwealth, and for an order for future expenditures, principles of comity required that portion of order providing for weekly payment for future expenditures should be effective only so long as trust property was sufficient to comply with weekly orders, after making allowance for cost of administration and other claims and expenses lawfully chargeable against property execution to be stayed until proceedings in New York are completed by final judgment.—In re Cronin, 192 A. 397, 326 Pa. 343.

Suit for alimony

A court having prior jurisdiction of an action by a wife against her husband for alimony cannot be ousted of its jurisdiction over the parties and subject matter by the institution of a later action in another state by the husband against the wife for divorce, nor because such later action proceeds to judgment by default in the husband's favor, which is not a bar to the wife's prior action for alimony where the wife did nothing to abandon her right to litigate her cause to a conclusion in the court of prior jurisdiction.—Hepner v. Hepner, 223 P. 1095, 115 Kan. 647.

Divorce proceedings

A decree of separation obtained in New York after wife's divorce suit was instituted in Florida, and before her amended bill was filed, by husband residing in New York, did not deprive Florida court of jurisdiction of divorce action, notwithstanding wife established residence in Florida for purpose of instituting divorce action.—Gratz v. Gratz, Fla., 188 So. 580.

Recovery of deposit for release from attachment

Where plaintiff whose property had been attached in a foreign jurisdiction was apprehensive of injury thereto, and therefore deposited a certain sum in a bank to the credit of the attaching creditors on condition that they would release the impounded property in the foreign jurisdiction, and thereafter immediately commenced suit against them to recover the deposit as made under duress, plaintiff's proper legal remedy was in the foreign court and not in the state where the deposit was made, since, where the form of duress complained of is accomplished by action in court, the aggrieved party must resort to the very tribunal in which the cause of action constituting the duress is pending.—Halley v. Fenner & Beane, supra.

§ 550. Property in Custody of Court

Ordinarily, the courts of one state will not interfere with respect to property rightfully in the custody of the courts of another state.

Sometimes stated as under the rule of comity,¹⁰ the rights of a court of one state as to the control of property which has come into its possession and over which it has jurisdiction will be recognized by courts of other states, and such possession will not ordinarily be interfered with by the latter.¹¹ However, it is within the discretion of the court having custody of a res to allow claims against it to be litigated elsewhere.¹² In accord with the foregoing, the courts of one state will not ordinarily interfere with the administration of insolvent,¹³ or decedent,¹⁴ or trust¹⁵ estates properly in the courts of another state,¹⁶ unless called on by the

Judgment against foreign executor

County court of Oklahoma was without authority to direct Tennessee executor of deceased widow's estate to satisfy such court's judgment for amount advanced to widow by executors of her deceased husband's estate out of Tennessee assets subject to Tennessee probate court's exclusive control.—York v. Bank of Commerce & Trust Co., supra.

Administration proceedings

Where testator and his second wife were domiciled in Ohio until shortly before his death there, and his will could not be proved in that state against her objections because it was holographic and offended the community law of that state, her ex parte administration proceedings therein gave the Ohio court plenary jurisdiction over all assets decedent left in that state.—Hutton v. Blackburn, 192 N.Y.S. 527, 117 Misc. 434.

Custody not interfered with

(1) Where plaintiff in South Carolina borrowed money from nonresident corporation and pledged stock of South Carolina corporation as security for loan, attachment by plaintiff of nonresident's interest in stock was attachment of property located in South Carolina and did not interfere with right which foreign court had to adjudicate or administer equity of redemption or reversionary interest of plaintiff and another in such, and hence, attachment was not affected by pendency of suit in foreign court involving such stock.—La Varre v. International Paper Co., D.C.S.C., 37 F.2d 141.

(2) The creditor's interest in the stock of the South Carolina corporation pledged as security was held not abrogated by the Georgia court taking charge of stock for purpose of operation and control so as to prevent attachment of such interest.—La Varre v. International Paper Co., supra.

Reason for rule

"Experience has demonstrated that, in order to secure an economical, efficient, and orderly liquidation and distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation for the benefit of all creditors and stockholders, it is essential that the title, custody, and control of the assets be intrusted to a single management under the supervision of one court. Hence other courts, except when called upon by the court of primary jurisdiction for assistance, are excluded from participation."—Motlow v. Southern Holding & Securities Corporation, supra.

Claims of opposing administrators to corporate stock

Where there was no controversy as to the ownership of stock in a domestic corporation, which admittedly was in a nonresident decedent, the courts of the state should not undertake to settle the claims of two sets of administrators appointed by courts of different states to administer on the stock.—Griswold v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., supra.

Absence of local creditors

Under N.Y.Code Civ.Proc. § 2515, giving the surrogate exclusive jurisdiction to grant letters testamentary or of administration where a nonresident dies leaving personal property within the state, and N.Y. General Construction Law § 39, defining personal property, the surrogate's jurisdiction over the administration of certificates of stock in a New Jersey corporation, which certificates were taken into the state by a resident of Ohio, who died in New York, heavily indebted to citizens of that state, will not be interfered with by New Jersey court, where there are no creditors there.—Griswold v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., supra.

Court appointing trustee

Jurisdiction to control administration of trusts is limited to court which appoints trustee.—Schuster v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, supra.

Rule inapplicable

(1) That realty comprising assets of testamentary trust was located in Tennessee and was being administered by court of that state did not deprive Florida court of jurisdiction over subject matter of contempt proceeding against trustee against whom personal judgment was rendered for failure to file an accounting in Florida.—Baskin v. Montedonico, D.C.Tenn., 26 F.Supp. 834.

(2) A testamentary trustee could not avoid liability in suit on Florida judgment rendered against him for failing to file an accounting of his administration of trust property located in Tennessee, on ground that he could not lawfully transfer funds from Tennessee to Florida without express order of Tennessee probate court, in absence of any showing that he sought to obtain such authority.—Baskin v. Montedonico, supra.

Trust estate

Where estate of testatrix, a resident of New York, was administered in New York according to its law, and administration included an award of trust property to trustee in Pennsylvania for benefit of inmate of hospital for mentally diseased in Pennsylvania, New York surrogate's court retained jurisdiction over continued administration of trust and trustee was required to account there for remainder of trust property not consumed.—In re Cronin, 192 A. 397, 326 Pa. 343.

court of primary jurisdiction¹⁷ the jurisdiction of the latter court being a continuing one until the proceedings are finally disposed of and closed.¹⁸ This primary jurisdiction of the court will not be interfered with because of dissatisfaction of litigants with its decrees.¹⁹

§ 551. Enforcing Judgment

The courts of one state may enforce judgments of a court of competent jurisdiction of another state.

A state court may take jurisdiction of proceedings for the purpose of enforcing a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction of another state.²⁰

For a treatment of the operation and effect of foreign judgments see the C.J.S. title Judgments §§ 889-898, also 34 C.J. p 1125 note 42-p 1156 note 24.

Obtaining leave of court to sue. A statutory or code provision that no action shall be brought after final judgment in foreclosure to recover any part of the mortgage debt without leave of the court in which foreclosure was had does not apply to an action to recover a balance due after foreclosure of a mortgage in the court of another state on land situated in the latter state.²¹

§ 552. Annulling Judgment

The courts of one state have no authority to modify, vacate, or annul the judgments or decrees of courts of other states or countries.

A court of one state has no authority to modify, vacate, or annul the judgment or decree of a court of another state or country,²² and determination by a court that a judgment or decree of a court of another state was rendered without jurisdiction does not have the effect of vacating such judgment or decree in the latter state.²³

§ 553. Suspension of Proceedings

The courts of one state cannot stay proceedings in the courts of another state or country.

Although, as may be seen in Actions § 133 c (6), a court has the power in a proper case to stay proceedings before it during the pendency of a similar suit in a foreign court, a court of one state cannot stay proceedings in an action instituted in another state or country,²⁴ nor will it stay the parties to the action before it from prosecuting an action in a foreign court if no valid ground therefor appears.²⁵

Equities for forum to determine

gants to use the courts of their own state,³² nor even because the complaining party has good reason to apprehend a less favorable result for himself in a foreign court,³³ it having been considered that such a course is inconsistent with interstate harmony and should not be resorted to.³⁴ See the C.J.S. title Injunctions, also 32 C.J. p 114 note 38—p 119 note 12, for a consideration of the grounds on which actions or proceedings in foreign courts will be enjoined.

While a court usually will not, as a matter of comity permit a party to violate an injunction issued in another state against prosecution of the suit in such court,³⁵ neither comity nor the full faith and credit clause of the federal constitution requires a court to respect such an injunction, it operating against the parties and not the foreign court.³⁶

Ordinarily the courts of one state do not interfere with the administration of estates by receivers properly appointed by courts of other states.

The appointment of a receiver by the court of one state gives him no power or authority beyond the limits of the jurisdiction of the court making the appointment.³⁸ On principles of comity, however, such a receiver is recognized and permitted to exercise in another state functions vested in him by his appointment,³⁹ but this is permitted only ment of judgment.—Meyer v. Milliken, supra.

Property rights involved

A plaintiff deprived of her property rights by foreign judgment which appeared on its face to be void as conflicting with findings of court rendering judgment could maintain equitable action to enjoin enforcement of judgment.—Meyer v. Milliken, supra.

Procedure

A suit to enjoin enforcement of foreign judgment which was void on its face was not governed by rules applicable to an attack on a domestic judgment.—Meyer v. Milliken, supra.

Obtaining possession of property

On the principles of interstate comity, a receiver of a railroad corporation appointed in one state may be allowed to institute proceedings in another state to obtain possession of the rolling stock, although such stock has been attached in the former state by a creditor of the corporation.—Merchants' Bank v. McLeod, 38 Ohio St. 174.

Primary and ancillary receiver

Where a receiver was appointed for an insolvent New Jersey corporation in that state, an order by the New York supreme court subsequently appointing such receiver as receiver of the corporation's assets in New York was subsidiary to, and in recognition of, his appointment in New Jersey, so that the orders and decrees of the New Jersey court in the receivership proceedings were binding on the New York courts.—Coe v. Patterson, 106 N.Y.S. 659, 122 where it will not violate the public policy of such other state, or infringe on or defeat rights of domestic creditors.⁴⁰

The courts of one state will not ordinarily interfere with the administration of an insolvent estate by a receiver properly appointed by the courts of another state.⁴¹ Hence, the creditors of an insolvent corporation cannot enforce claims thereof in the courts of another state without leave of the court under whose jurisdiction the receiver is administering the estate;⁴² nor can claims of such creditors be enforced in the courts of other states against property of the insolvent in such state, title to which is in the receiver under the statutes of the other state.⁴³ Where, however, under the statutes of the state in which the insolvent's estate is being administered, title to the property does not vest in the receiver, creditors may enforce their claims against property in another state in the courts of such state.⁴⁴

A court of a state in which a corporation is organized is not ousted of its jurisdiction to appoint a general receiver for such corporation by the fact that a foreign court has taken charge of the corporate assets within its jurisdiction and appointed a receiver thereof,⁴⁵ even if purportedly

Filing claim with receiver

A holder of certificates of deposit issued in Iowa by Iowa private bank and payable in Iowa, who filed claims thereon with Iowa receiver of bank and accepted payments on account from receiver, thereby elected his forum and could not sue owner of bank individually in California, notwithstanding Iowa court had not yet ordered receiver to sue owner for benefit of bank's creditors.—*Leggate v. Application for leave to sue necessary

While Virginia court appointing receiver of Virginia bank could authorize bank creditors to sue on bank claims in another state, such suit cannot be so maintained if the Virginia court refuses to authorize the same, mere allegation that receiver has refused to sue, without showing that they applied to the court appointing the receiver for an order requiring him to sue, or, in the alternative, permitting plaintiffs to sue not being sufficient to give court jurisdiction.—*Lewis v. Full faith and credit clause violated

Decree of Montana supreme court, in so far as permitting judgment creditors of dissolved Iowa insurance corporation to take out and levy execution against local assets to satisfy judgment as against title to such assets of Iowa insurance commissioner as statutory liquidator and successor to dissolved corporation, on theory that insurance commissioner was receiver deriving title through judicial proceedings, is invalid as denying full faith and credit to statutes and judicial proceedings of Iowa.—Clark v. Williard, 54 S.Ct. 615, 292 U.S. 112, 78 L.Ed. 1160, modifying Mieyr v. Federal Surety Co. of Davenport, Iowa, 23 P.2d 959, 94 Mont. 508, certiorari granted Clark v. Williard, 54 S.Ct. 103, 290 U.S. 619, 78 L.Ed. 540.

Appointment of receiver

Indiana policyholders or creditors of insolvent Missouri insurance corporation are not entitled to have receivers appointed in Indiana, where Missouri superintendent of insurance by court decree had acquired title to all corporation's property, and there was no evidence that corporation had any substantial amount of property within Indiana or that Indiana policyholders and creditors would be discriminated against in liquidation of corporation under Missouri law.—O'Malley v. Hankins, 194 N.E. 168, 207 Ind. 589.

Garnishment

On the principle of comity Minnesota courts should not entertain garnishment by Minnesota creditor to collect claim from assets of insolvent South Dakota bank in Minnesota, where title to such assets is in superintendent of bank of South Dakota.—Pride v. Bank of Commerce, Milbank, S. D., 212 N.W. 3, 170 Minn. 120.

44. Del.—Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. New Jersey Fidelity & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 181 A. 1, 7 W.W.Harr. 174.

Full faith and credit clause not violated

New Jersey statute providing for stay of judgments against insolvent insurance corporations, on insurance commissioner's taking possession of property thereof, does not preclude creditor from reducing claims against insolvent corporation to judgment, in New Jersey courts or elsewhere, nor preclude judgment creditor from instituting action of foreign attachment and attaching property of corporation located in another state, notwithstanding full faith and credit clause where title to the corporate property remains in corporation.—Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. New Jersey Fidelity & Plate Glass Ins. Co., supra.

Reason for rule

"It would be contrary to well-established and universally accepted principles if the court of the corporation's domicile could thus be ousted from that jurisdiction which the sovereign creating the corporation had conferred over the affairs of its creature. There can be no reason for debate concerning the jurisdiction of this court to exercise its recognized chancery powers, as well those founded in its general equity jurisdiction as in statutory grant, to appoint receivers over corporations whose existence is due solely to the grace of the sovereign here creating them, regardless of what might be the action of courts elsewhere in taking charge of their affairs. If there be any debatable ground with respect to such matters, it lies solely in that field of discussion where questions are raised concerning the extent to which other courts may properly go in exercising jurisdiction over corporations which, as to their jurisdiction, are foreign."—Frankland v. Remington Phonograph Corporation, supra.

a general receiver.⁴⁶ Where, however, a court in one state through appointment of a receiver takes into its possession property of the corporation in such state, it obtains a jurisdiction over that property which cannot be controlled by any other court, including the one where the receivership was first instituted.⁴⁷ If a person is appointed receiver in actions in courts of several states, in each of which states the corporation was incorporated, relief may be obtained against the receiver in one of such states without conflicting with the jurisdiction of the others.⁴⁸

It has been held that the appointment of a receiver of a corporation by a domiciliary court does not bring corporate property in another state into custodia legis until the receiver has reduced such property to possession,⁴⁹ and until this is done it does not defeat or destroy the lien of attaching creditors in another state acquired after appointment of such receiver.⁵⁰ Where, however, a court appointing a receiver approves the transfer of property in possession of its receiver to the primary receiver in another state, the courts of the latter have jurisdiction to adjudicate conflicting claims to such property.⁵¹

Where mortgages on land in a state are sent to a domestic receiver by a foreign receiver of a foreign corporation, the courts of such state will have jurisdiction of the proceeds in the absence of any agreement or condition for collection.⁵²

D. CIVIL COURTS AND COURTS MARTIAL

§ 556. General Statement

As appears in Army and Navy § 54 a of this work, civil courts may have concurrent jurisdiction of offenses triable before courts-martial, although as to strictly military offenses the jurisdiction of courts-martial is exclusive. In § 59 of such work is considered generally the right to, and extent of, review in civil courts of proceedings before courts-martial, while in the C.J.S. title Habeas Corpus § 31, also 29 C.J. p 93 note 63—p 94 note 73, is considered the right to and extent of, review of such proceedings by habeas corpus.

COURTYARD. The term is said to be a corrupted form of "cortilage," and has been defined as meaning a court or an inclosure about a house or adjacent to it.¹

COUSIN. The term has been defined as meaning the son or daughter of a brother or sister of one's father or mother; also the issue respectively of two brothers or two sisters, or of a brother and a sister.² In the absence of language extending its

Delegation of authority to foreign court

Since the jurisdiction of a court to appoint a receiver in so far as it affects property within the state is independent of the jurisdiction of foreign courts, an order appointing a receiver will not be modified so as to make the action pending in one state collateral or ancillary to an action pending in another state, especially where such modification would be a delegation of the court's authority to the tribunal of the other state.—Taylor v. (1) Where receivers of corporation owning land in several states borrowed money to finance cropping operations thereon, with agreement that they were to sell crops in all states and bring sums realized into one fund from which the loans would be paid, which agreement was approved by the courts of the several states, the court of the state where the contract was made had jurisdiction thereof and of conflicting claims to the funds realized from the cropping operations.—Receivers of Middlesex Banking Co. v. Realty Inv. Co., supra.

§ 1. Nature and Scope of Action

The action of covenant is a personal action to recover damages for breach of a contract under seal.

The common-law action of covenant is a remedy for the recovery of damages for the breach of a covenant or contract under seal.¹ It is a personal action,² and, as is shown in Actions § 33, is classed with actions ex contractu.

§ 2. — Origin and History

Originally the action of covenant was used for various purposes, including the recovery of a leasehold by the lessee, but in modern times it is a personal action ex contractu.

The action of covenant, as stated in 15 C.J. p 1188 notes 2-7, is said to have descended from the ancient writ breve de conventionne. Primarily its purpose seems to have been to enforce the specific performance of the covenant broken, although if the breach was such that performance could not be enforced, or defendant continued refractory, damages occasioned thereby in proportion to the injury sustained were accorded to plaintiff.

Furthermore, by virtue of this action fines were collected at common law; and the action was the ancient remedy of a lessee, if ejected, against his lessor to recover the term and damages, or if the term had expired, or the ouster had been committed by a stranger claiming paramount title, then to recover damages only.

At an early date the use of the action of covenant as a real action disappeared, except for conveyancing, but as a personal action ex contractu it has survived, although, as appears in Actions § 39, codes of civil procedure and practice acts in some states have abolished the distinction between the different common-law forms of action.

§ 3. — Distinguished from Other Actions

The action of covenant is distinct, differing materially from other forms of action.

The action of covenant differs from other actions.³

The distinction between the action of covenant and the actions of account, assumpsit, case, and debt is discussed in Actions § 36.

§ 4. — Statutory Provisions

As is shown in § 9 infra, in some jurisdictions, as a result of statute, an action of covenant may be maintained on an unsealed instrument. Furthermore, as appears in Actions § 39, codes of civil procedure and practice acts in many jurisdictions have abolished the distinctions between the different common-law forms of action and have provided for a single form of civil action.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 5. What Law Governs

To sustain an action of covenant the instrument must be a specialty under the lex fori.

Under the general rule stated in Conflict of Laws § 22 b and Contracts § 21, an action of covenant will not lie on an instrument which is not a specialty, by the law of the forum, although it would be considered as under seal in the place where it was made.⁴

§ 6. Right of Action and Grounds in General

A mere equitable right to receive a legal title to particular property will not support an action of covenant.

A mere equitable right to require the transfer of the legal title to specified property, arising out of a transaction constituting a mortgage, does not, it has been held, furnish a foundation for the action of covenant.⁵

§ 7. Necessity for Written Instrument Signed and Sealed

As a general rule, an action of covenant may be maintained only on a written, signed, and sealed instrument.

As a general rule, covenant may be maintained only on an agreement in writing which has been properly and lawfully signed and sealed by the party,⁶ or by his authority,⁷ and which is recognized in law as a sealed instrument.⁸

15 C.J. p 1190 note 28.

The fact that an instrument, in conclusion, states that it is signed and sealed does not justify an action of covenant thereon if it does not in law constitute a specialty,⁹ but the fact that the seal on an agreement was torn off does not destroy its effect as a deed, and covenant will lie thereon.¹⁰

Instrument sealed by grantor only. While the general rule is to the contrary,¹¹ it has been held in some jurisdictions that an action of covenant may be maintained against the grantee in an instrument signed and sealed by the grantor only where the grantee has recognized and accepted the instrument,¹² although it has also been held that the exceptions to the general rule do not embrace mere personal contracts by which no estate in land passes.¹³

§ 8. — Exceptions to Rule

In some instances at common law an action of covenant could be maintained on an unsealed instrument.

To the general rule stated in § 7 supra, at common law there existed an exception, founded on the custom of London and other particular places, which permitted an action of covenant on unsealed instruments.¹⁴ The action could be maintained on an unsealed instrument where defendant derived title under a grant or patent from the crown.¹⁵

§ 9. — Modification or Change by Statute

Under statutory changes in some jurisdictions, an action of covenant may be maintained on unsealed instruments.

As an exception to the general rule stated in § 7 supra, where the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments has been abolished by statute, see the C.J.S. title Seals § 2, also 56 C.J. p 890 note 12, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the action of covenant may be maintained on any writing operating as a deed,¹⁶ or on which debt or assumpsit might have been maintained before the abolition of such distinction.¹⁷

§ 10. Nature of Promise or Agreement

To support an action of covenant there must be a binding obligation, although the form in which the agreement is expressed is not controlling.

As a foundation for an action of covenant a binding agreement or obligation is necessary.¹⁸ However, the covenant need not be formal, or precise, or in any particular form,¹⁹ but the action will lie as long as the instrument on which it is based is a writing under seal, containing an agreement or obligation.²⁰

Thus covenant will lie for a breach of a writing obligatory to pay a certain sum of money;²¹ for the breach of covenant to make a deed;²² for the breach of a cropper's agreement;²³ and on the mutual covenants of tenants in common.²⁴ However, it may not be maintained on a receipt given for attached property for the proceeds of the property which had been sold by permission.²⁵

Where the obligation arises from the nature of the transaction and not from the instrument, and the obligation and remedy would exist if there were no instrument in writing, the action of covenant may not be maintained.²⁶

Covenant in præsenti. In the old authorities it is said that the action may not be maintained on a covenant in præsenti,²⁷ but this distinction is not generally recognized.²⁸

Unsealed lease held not within statute providing that certain classes of instruments shall be deemed to be sealed instruments although no seal is attached thereto; hence, covenant is not maintainable thereon.—*Nowell v. § 11. — May Be Implied

To support an action of covenant, the agreement may be implied as well as expressed.

As a foundation for an action of covenant it is not essential that the covenant be an express one; it is sufficient if the words used are such that the law will imply an agreement.²⁹ So, where an instrument shows that the parties thereto intended to bind themselves to the performance of stipulated acts, it will support an action in the form of covenant,³⁰ even though the word "covenant" does not appear in the instrument.³¹

§ 12. — Modified by Parol

A sealed instrument modified or enlarged by parol will not support an action of covenant.

Covenant may not be maintained on a sealed instrument which is shown to have been modified or enlarged by parol.³²

The action may, however, be maintained on a specialty, although an unexecuted parol agreement is attached thereto;³³ or when the oral agreement merely regulates the application of the instrument as a specialty without modifying it;³⁴ or when the oral agreement merely gives precision to the indefinite terms of the contract.³⁵

§ 13. — Money Payable in Installments

Covenant will lie to recover each installment of a debt as it becomes due, but it will not lie where all payments are due and payable.

Although, as is shown infra § 22, plaintiff must set out in his declaration the covenant as made, nevertheless, since a failure to pay the installments of a debt when due constitutes a breach, a party may have an action of covenant to recover such installments, without depriving himself of his remedy for other breaches which may subsequently occur.³⁶ The action will not lie, however, where all of the payments are due and payable.³⁷

§ 14. Performance by Plaintiff

To support an action of covenant plaintiff must show a strict performance of his part of the agreement, unless such performance is waived or excused.

As a general rule, in order to maintain an action of covenant on a contract under seal, plaintiff must show a strict performance of his part of the agreement.³⁸ Where, however, the contract has been performed in part, and its full performance has been prevented by defendant, complete performance is excused so as to permit an action of covenant on the writing;³⁹ and in such case, when the contract has not been repudiated by defendant, plaintiff's only remedy is an action on the writing.⁴⁰

When defendant waives the performance of a part of a specialty, it does not constitute the contract a new one, and covenant may still be brought thereon.⁴¹

§ 15. Defenses

An action of covenant may be brought at any time within the period limited by statute.

Unless barred by the statute of limitations, the action of covenant may be brought at any time;⁴² but, if the time for commencing the action is limited by statute, the action must be instituted within the time prescribed.⁴³

The statute commences to run from the time when the cause of action accrues.⁴⁴

§ 16. Persons Entitled to Sue

At common law only parties to a sealed instrument may maintain an action of covenant thereon. A person may maintain the action although he, himself, may not be thus sued and although he and defendant are partners.

Unless authorized by statute, one not a party to a sealed instrument may not maintain an action of covenant thereon.⁴⁵ The action will lie only between those parties between whom there exists a privity of contract or estate.⁴⁶

Covenant binding on defendant only. The fact that the execution of the instrument sued on by plaintiff is so defective that he may be proceeded against only in assumpsit will not deprive him of the right to bring an action of covenant against defendant who duly signed and sealed the instrument.⁴⁷ Furthermore, an infant may maintain an action of covenant against a person of full age, although the infant is not bound by his own covenant.⁴⁸

Partners. Where there is a valid and subsisting covenant existing between the parties, the mere fact that they are partners does not preclude a resort to this remedy for a breach of such covenant,⁴⁹ even though there may be accounts between the parties which would require unraveling in a court of equity.⁵⁰

Covenant will not lie, however, at the suit of one partner against another for a balance due on partnership account.⁵¹

§ 17. Persons Liable

An action of covenant ordinarily is maintainable against an executor except for breach of a covenant to be performed by the testator personally.

Instrument sealed by grantor only. As is shown in § 7 supra, as a general rule an action of covenant may not be maintained on an instrument signed and sealed by the grantor only.

§ 18. Jurisdiction and Venue

At common law, covenant is a local action when founded on privity of estate, transitory when founded on privity of contract.

Under the common law the action of covenant when founded on privity of contract is transitory and may be brought as a transitory action, but when founded on privity of estate the action is local and must be brought where the land is located.⁵⁵ However, where the venue of such an action is regulated by statute, such legislation controls.⁵⁶

ply in an action of covenant.⁵⁷ The declaration must contain averments necessary to constitute a cause of action in covenant.⁵⁸

While a declaration in an action of covenant may be varied according to the nature of the instrument declared on,⁵⁹ as a general rule it is sufficient where it declares on the instrument according to its legal operation and assigns breaches substantially in the words of the covenant.⁶⁰ Averments which are unnecessary to a recovery, when not contradictory, will be considered as surplusage.⁶¹

The declaration must show with whom defendant covenanted;⁶² and must aver the amount of damages claimed,⁶³ especially where plaintiff claims special damages such as the law does not imply from the facts stated.⁶⁴

The usual conclusion in a declaration of covenant, "that the defendant (although often requested so to do,) hath not kept his said covenant, but hath broken the same," followed by a demand of damages, is merely formal and is not necessary to the legality of the declaration.⁶⁵

Amendments. If it appears upon oyer of a deed that some of the defendants are not parties thereto, the declaration may, it has been held, be amended by striking out their names on payment of costs.⁶⁶

§ 21. — The Instrument

A declaration in covenant must allege defendant's execution and sealing of the instrument.

The declaration in covenant must allege that defendant entered into the covenant declared on, and where the action may only be maintained on a sealed instrument, see §§ 7-9 supra, the declaration must also allege an agreement under seal.⁶⁷

It is not sufficient to allege merely that defendant made his covenant,⁶⁸ or that he executed a writing, setting it forth in hæc verba, concluding with "sealed and delivered," etc., and the name of the covenantor, with the letters L S, but nowhere else alleging that the instrument was sealed.⁶⁹ However, the use of words which import that the instrument was sealed, as, for example, "indenture," "deed," or "writing obligatory," has been held sufficient.⁷⁰

§ 22. — The Covenant

A declaration in covenant must aver a promise or set out equivalent words, but the instrument need not be set out in hæc verba.

The declaration in covenant must aver or assert a promise, or must contain words equivalent to a promise.⁷¹ Where the agreement contains several distinct parts or covenants, and the cause of action arises on less than the whole, it is sufficient to set out only such part as relates to the breaches to be assigned.⁷²

Where there has been a mistake in the wording of the instrument, the declaration may be drawn according to the actual agreement of the parties with proper averments showing the mistake;⁷³ but a declaration on a covenant contained in an instrument which is produced may not be aided by allegations setting forth a covenant different from that in the original document.⁷⁴ If the language of the covenant is such that it may operate in several ways, it must be set forth so as to show the particular purpose for which it is produced.⁷⁵

Implied covenants may be set forth in the declaration in like manner as if they were expressed in the deed.⁷⁶

Where the covenant is for the payment of money, the declaration should allege the happening of the event or condition upon which the obligation was to become due and payable.⁷⁷

Setting out instrument or its legal effect. It is not necessary that the instrument be set out in hæc verba;⁷⁸ but it must either be set forth in the words of the contract itself, or, according to its legal effect, by stating its true meaning and intention.⁷⁹

Where a sealed instrument has been subsequently modified by another sealed instrument, both should be averred in the declaration.⁸⁰

§ 23. — The Breach

A declaration in covenant must sufficiently assign a breach of the covenant declared on.

A declaration in covenant must allege a breach of the covenant in suit.⁸¹ The allegation must be sufficient.⁸²

The breach must be alleged with certainty.⁸³ For the allegation to be sufficient, the breach assigned must not vary from the sense and substance of the contract, or be either more limited or more extensive than the covenant;⁸⁴ but where the assignment is sufficient as to some and insufficient as to other breaches, plaintiff may recover for those sufficiently assigned.⁸⁵

As a general rule, plaintiff may assign a breach by negating the words of the covenant,⁸⁶ provided such general assignment necessarily amounts to a breach.⁸⁷ Where, however, an assignment of a breach in the words of the covenant does not necessarily imply that the covenant has been broken, the assignment is insufficient, and the breach must be specially alleged.⁸⁸ A breach assigned in the words of the covenant is insufficient where the words of a covenant taken in connection with the residue of the instrument do not mean the same as when they are separated from their context;⁸⁹ or where the law implies a covenant, although there is none expressed, or where, by construction of law, the operation of the covenant is more restricted than the words of the covenant in their usual import would indicate.⁹⁰

On the other hand, it is not necessary that the breach be assigned in the words of the covenant, but it is generally sufficient that the words of the assignment show unequivocally a substantial breach,⁹¹ or that it distinctly appears, by express words or by necessary implication, that the covenant has been broken by defendant.⁹² So, the breach may be assigned in other words which are coextensive with the import and effect of the covenant,⁹³ or in words as general as those in which the covenant is expressed,⁹⁴ or may be assigned by stating its legal effect.⁹⁵

The averment of a breach should negative every mode of performance which the previous averments would authorize.⁹⁶

A declaration in covenant ordinarily need not allege a consideration.

96. Ky.—Dorsey v. Lawrence, Hard. 508.

As a general rule, a declaration in covenant need not contain a statement of the consideration.⁹⁷

§ 25. — Performance of Conditions Precedent

A declaration in covenant must allege performance or tender of performance, of any prior covenant or condition binding on plaintiff.

If the liability of defendant depends on the performance of a prior covenant or condition on the part of plaintiff, performance, or a tender of performance of such condition, must be averred in a declaration of covenant;⁹⁸ but plaintiff need not aver the performance of acts which he is not legally bound to perform.⁹⁹

§ 26. Plea

In an action of covenant defendant must either traverse, or confess and avoid, the declared breach, and his plea must be responsive to, and coextensive with, the whole declaration.

The general rules relative to pleas in civil actions, discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 99 et seq, also 49 C.J. p 179 note 58 et seq, ordinarily apply in actions of covenant.¹

Where the declaration or complaint sets out particularly the facts constituting the breach, and the assignment shows a breach sufficient in law, defendant must either confess and avoid, or traverse, the breach thus set out.² Any part of the declaration not answered or denied is admitted,³ although it has been held that matters of defense which are not well pleaded do not constitute an admission of the cause of action.⁴

Except in the case of an ill-assigned breach, which need not be answered,⁵ the plea or answer must be responsive to, and coextensive with, the whole declaration;⁶ and, if it is thus responsive, it is sufficient.⁷ The answer or plea should avoid duplicity.⁸

Where several breaches are assigned, defendant may plead to a part and demur to part,⁹ but he may not do so where the count is indivisible;¹⁰ and a plea to the whole action must be good as to each breach.¹¹ Where the plea professes to be an answer to the whole declaration or count, and in truth is only an answer to a part, plaintiff may demur but may not take judgment for the part unanswered.¹² However, such a plea is not demurrable when all of the breaches assigned are answered severally by separate pleas.¹³

Abatement or bar to action. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the plea need not be technically either in abatement or bar to the action but may set up whatever facts which may influence the judgment.¹⁴

Pleading proviso or exception. Where the covenant contains a proviso or exception not in the body of the covenant itself, but in a separate clause of the contract, in order to avail himself thereof in an action for a breach of the covenant the party seeking to avoid it must specially plead such proviso or exception.¹⁵

Putting in issue plaintiff's performance. Where defendant desires to take advantage of plaintiff's failure to perform his covenant he must set forth specially such covenant with the time and manner in which it was to be performed, and must aver that he is ready and willing, and has offered, to perform his part of the agreement.¹⁶ The plea should also specify the particulars in which plaintiff has failed to perform.¹⁷ Likewise, where defendant relies on the breach of plaintiff's covenant as a defense, he should set out in the plea the covenant which it is claimed was broken,¹⁸ since the practice of merely setting out the deed containing the covenant as a part of the pleading is condemned.¹⁹ A plea setting forth an independent covenant on the part of plaintiff in favor of defendant is bad.²⁰

In some jurisdictions the usual method of requiring plaintiff to prove performance of his covenants is to add the words absque hoc to the plea of covenants performed.²¹

A subsequent plea puis darrein continuance, by one of the defendants, after issue joined on a joint plea to the merits, has been held to be an abandonment by him of the former joint plea, although the latter would stand as the several plea of the other defendant, to the same effect as if he had pleaded alone.²²

Sham, frivolous, and improper pleas. A sham or frivolous plea will be stricken out,²³ and this is true also of frivolous pleas even where the declaration is itself insufficient.²⁴

While it has been held that the technical plea of payment is irrelevant to an action of covenant and is properly stricken out,²⁵ the plea has also been allowed without objection;²⁶ and it has been held that the pleas of non est factum and payment may properly be joined.²⁷

The following pleas have been held to be inappropriate in an action of covenant: "Not guilty,"²⁸ "nil debet" and "non damnificatus,"²⁹ and "never promised."³⁰

Conclusion of plea. A plea which is a denial of a direct material averment in the declaration should conclude to the country;³¹ but where new matter is introduced by way of confession and avoidance, the plea must conclude with a verification.³²

§ 27. — Necessity of Special Plea

In covenant, defendant ordinarily must plead specially all matters of defense.

Strictly speaking, there is no plea of the general issue in an action of covenant;³³ hence, as a general rule, defendant must plead specially all matters of defense.³⁴ Performance ordinarily must be specially pleaded, see § 30 infra.

It has been held to be no objection to a special plea that it amounts to a plea of the general issue.³⁵

Statutory provisions. Pursuant to statutory regulation, defendant may plead the general issue in an action of covenant.³⁶ Under a statute making covenant and debt concurrent remedies, a plea of the general issue in debt, interposed in an action of covenant, is correctly used to answer the same end that it does in an action of debt.³⁷

§ 28. — Non Est Factum

In covenant, the plea of non est factum has been considered in the nature of a general issue.

Although strictly speaking, there is no plea of the general issue in an action of covenant, see supra § 27, and, as is shown infra § 33 a (2), a plea of non est factum merely puts the deed in issue, nevertheless, non est factum has been considered in the nature of a general issue to the extent that special matters of defense may be subjoined thereto, where such matters could be subjoined to the general issue.³⁸

§ 29. — Non Infregit Conventionem

In covenant, a plea of non infregit conventionem admits the deed but denies the breach.

In an action of covenant the plea of non infregit conventionem admits the deed but denies the breaches assigned.³⁹

Where the breach of the covenant is assigned in the negative,⁴⁰ or where the declaration states several breaches,⁴¹ the plea of non infregit conventionem is bad on demurrer, although good on motion in arrest after verdict.⁴²

The statutes of limitations may be pleaded by adding to the plea of non infregit conventionem the allegation that defendant did not break the covenant within the period fixed by such statutes.⁴³

§ 30. — Performance

In covenant, performance ordinarily must be pleaded specially, and separately to each breach. In some cases a plea of tender before suit brought must be renewed.

Where all of the covenants are in the affirmative, and comprehend a multiplicity of matters general in their nature, a plea of general performance is good.⁴⁴

Ordinarily, however, a plea of general performance is insufficient.⁴⁵ Where the declaration contains an assignment of a particular breach, a plea of performance amounts to a plea of general performance,⁴⁶ and issue cannot be taken thereon.⁴⁷ Defendant must specially plead as matters of defense, and aver the time, place, and manner in which the covenant was performed or the facts which constitute the defense where he desires to rely on performance of the covenant,⁴⁸ or on a valid excuse from performance,⁴⁹ or matters in discharge thereof.⁵⁰ Defendant should plead separately to each breach assigned.⁵¹

A plea alleging performance on the part of defendant and nonperformance by plaintiff of conditions precedent has been held both double and inconsistent.⁵²

Tender of performance. A plea of tender before suit brought must renew the tender in court;⁵³ and a plea of readiness to perform without averring an offer of performance is bad.⁵⁴ However, it is sufficient to plead a tender in accordance with the covenant, without repeating the tender, in the case of cumbrous property,⁵⁵ or in an action on a covenant that another person will fulfill his agreement to pay, etc.⁵⁶

§ 31. — Fraud

In covenant, fraud in inducing the contract may be pleaded by alleging the particular facts and circumstances.

In an action of covenant on a contract under seal, defendant may plead that the contract was obtained by fraud and imposition.⁵⁷ Such a plea has been held sufficient where the fraud is assigned in general terms,⁵⁸ but the usual and better practice is to allege the facts and circumstances which constitute the fraud.⁵⁹

§ 32. Subsequent Pleadings

General rules pertaining to demurrer, replications, and rejoinders ordinarily apply in actions of covenant.

Where there are several counts alleging breach of covenants,⁶⁰ or where several breaches are assigned in one count,⁶¹ a general demurrer to the whole will be overruled if any count or assignment is good.

Replication. Generally, where a plea or subsequent pleading sets up new matter in avoidance, a reply must be made to or issue joined on such pleading;⁶² but the mere absence of a similiter to a plea or subsequent pleading tendering an issue will not cause a reversal of a judgment where the parties have voluntarily gone to trial without insisting on it.⁶³ A replication containing no new matter and barely denying the facts alleged in the plea should conclude to the country and not with a verification, but such defect can be taken advantage of only by a special demurrer.⁶⁴

In the replication there must be no departure, in any material matter, from the allegations made in the declaration,⁶⁵ but it may sustain and fortify the declaration by reaffirming the cause of action therein set out.⁶⁶

Replication de injuria. Although the replication de injuria was originally confined to actions in tort, and its proper use was somewhat in controversy⁶⁷

it has been held to be properly used in a plea of leave and license to a count for breach of covenant.⁶⁸

Rejoinder. Defendant's rejoinder in answer to plaintiff's replication must support and not depart from the plea;⁶⁹ but where it fails to deny material allegations of the preceding pleading it is defective and will not support a judgment rendered thereon.⁷⁰

a. Issues and Proof

- (1) In general
- (2) Under plea of non est factum
- (3) Under plea of performance
- (4) Under plea of non infregit conventionem
- (5) Under declaration alleging performance

(1) In General

The statutory general issue in actions of covenant puts in issue plaintiff's entire cause of action.

General rules pertaining to issues, proof, and variance ordinarily apply in actions of covenant.⁷¹

The general issue as allowed by statute in some jurisdictions, see § 27 supra, puts in issue plaintiff's entire cause of action, and compels him to prove it.⁷² Under a statute which does not require administrators and executors to set up special matters of defense in an action of covenant, it has been held that evidence of special matters of defense could be given under any plea that puts in issue the merits of the case.⁷³

(2) Under Plea of Non Est Factum

A plea of non est factum ordinarily puts in issue only the lawful execution of the covenant.

Replication held not departure from declaration

When defendant by his plea in bar makes it necessary, plaintiff in his replication may show that he has done what by the plea is required to substantiate, in a legal sense, the averments in the declaration, and show his right to recover.—Fowler v. Macomb, 2 Root, Conn., 388.

In an action of covenant, the plea of non est factum, see supra § 28, ordinarily puts in issue only the execution of the covenant in a lawful manner,⁷⁴ and admits all other material averments of the declaration.⁷⁵

While under this plea defendant may contend at the trial that the deed was never executed in point of fact,⁷⁶ or show that his agent by whom the deed was executed had no authority so to do,⁷⁷ he may not deny its validity in point of law.⁷⁸ Furthermore, defendant may not question his power to enter into the covenant;⁷⁹ nor, in an action between a lessor and a lessee, may the title to land be questioned under such plea.⁸⁰

Defendant may, however, under the plea of non est factum, avail himself, on the trial, of a variance in the statement of the deed either in respect of a misstatement or of the omission of a covenant qualifying the contract.⁸¹ If the declaration does not aver the covenant in its exact language and simply alleges its legal effect, the plea has been held to put in issue the actual covenant as well as its due execution;⁸² but according to other authorities if defendant has over of the instrument and, instead of demurring, pleads non est factum, he may not object that there is a variance.⁸³

(3) Under Plea of Performance

The authorities are somewhat in conflict as to what matters are deemed to be admitted by a plea of performance. The plea ordinarily may be supported only by evidence of performance.

In an action of covenant, as a general rule plea of performance see § 30 supra, admits all matters that are properly alleged.⁸⁴ The plea admits the covenant as set out in the declaration.⁸⁵ However, the plea does not relieve plaintiff of the necessity of proving the damages claimed,⁸⁶ and in the absence of such proof nominal damages only will be allowed;⁸⁷ and in some jurisdictions plaintiff must prove his cause of action the same as if no plea, or negative pleas only, were filed.⁸⁸

According to some authorities, the plea of performance admits that the adverse party has performed his agreement, at least where, in addition, defendant fails to plead "absque hoc."⁸⁹

In some jurisdictions the addition of "absque hoc," etc., to the plea of covenants performed in an action on mutual covenants will put plaintiff to proof of performance on his part,⁹⁰ although it does not put in issue plaintiff's title⁹¹ or the execution of the instrument declared on.⁹²

Under a plea of covenants performed with notice of special matter, it has been held that an equitable defense may be given in evidence.⁹³

Ordinarily a plea of covenant performed can be supported only by evidence that defendant has performed his covenant, and not by evidence excusing his nonperformance,⁹⁴ or showing failure of consideration,⁹⁵ nonperformance of collateral covenants on the part of plaintiff,⁹⁶ or an alteration or variation of the covenant by parol;⁹⁷ but where it appears on the face of the covenant, as set out in the declaration, that defendant is not personally bound, he may take advantage of it after verdict on a plea of covenants performed.⁹⁸

Plea of covenants performed, with leave. As used in some jurisdictions, the plea of covenants performed, with leave, amounts to an agreement that defendant may give in evidence anything which he might plead, and which, in point of law, can protect him from plaintiff's claim.⁹⁹

Entry of issue. Where defendant pleads covenants performed, and the entry "and issue" is made in the docket, it is to be considered as a direction to the prothonotary to make a formal entry of the issue and the omission so to do is merely a clerical error.¹

(4) Under Plea of Non Infregit Conventionem

A plea of non infregit conventionem puts in issue the breach of, and defendant's obligation under, the covenant.

Since the plea of non infregit conventionem admits the deed but denies the breaches assigned, as is shown supra § 29, it permits proof of all such matters as show that the covenant is not broken,² or that defendant was never under an obligation to fulfill the covenant declared on.³

Parol enlargement of time for the performance of a covenant may not be shown under this plea.⁴

(5) Under Declaration Alleging Performance

Under a declaration alleging performance, evidence of excuse for nonperformance is admissible.

Where a declaration alleges full performance by plaintiff, evidence is admissible that plaintiff was prevented from performing by defendants, as an excuse for nonperformance tantamount to performance.⁵

b. Variance

General rules pertaining to variance between the pleadings and proof ordinarily apply in actions of covenant.

General rules pertaining to variance between the pleadings and proof in civil actions ordinarily apply in actions of covenant.⁶ The evidence must be responsive to the pleadings and must conform to the declaration and instrument declared on;⁷ and plaintiff must recover secundum allegata et probata, or not at all.⁸

To be fatal, a variance between the proof and the allegations in the pleadings must affect some material part of the action.⁹

§ 36. Judgment

Judgment in covenant should be for damages, without accruing interest.

In an action of covenant the judgment should be for damages;¹¹ and a judgment which allows accruing interest is erroneous.¹²

I. NATURE, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY

§ 1. In General

- a. Definition and nature
- b. Distinctions
- c. Consideration and validity

a. Definition and Nature

A covenant is an agreement to do or not to do a particular act.

A covenant is an agreement duly made to do or not to do a particular act.¹ It is a species of express contract;² and is a contract of a special nature.³

For the purpose of investigation, covenants may be divided into two classes: Covenants in deed, or express covenants;⁴ and covenants in law, or implied covenants.⁵

Particular words and provisions in various instruments have been held to constitute⁶ and not to constitute⁷ covenants.

b. Distinctions

A covenant differs from a condition; it has also been distinguished from an easement.

Although the term "condition" has, under particular circumstances, been construed as being used as equivalent to "covenant,"⁸ and while there are cases in which an instrument may contain both a condition and a covenant,⁹ as where it contains promissory words,¹⁰ a condition differs from a covenant,¹¹ both in the language that constitutes it and in the consequences which follow from a breach.¹²

A covenant is distinguished from a condition in that a condition is created by the mutual agree-

Other definitions

(1) The word "covenant" is defined as "an agreement, convention or promise of two or more parties, by deed in writing signed, sealed and delivered, by which either of the parties pledges himself to the other that something is either done or shall be done or stipulates for the truth of certain facts."—Curry v. Cotton, 191 N.E. 307, 310, 356 Ill. 538.

(2) "A covenant has been defined as an agreement between two or more persons, entered into by deed, whereby one of the parties promises the performance or nonperformance of certain acts, or that a given state of things does or shall, or does not or shall not exist."—Queen City Park Ass'n v. Gale, 3 A.2d 529, 532, 110 Vt. 110.

(3) "An agreement duly made between the parties to do or not to do a particular act, or whereby either doth promise to the other that something is done already or shall be done afterwards, or a stipulation as to the nonperformance of some specified duty, or stipulation as to the truth of certain facts."—Lowery v. May, 104 So. 5, 8, 213 Ala. 66.

(4) "Any words in a writing under the hand, whether sealed or unsealed, of a person importing an agreement, is a covenant."—Guld v. Wallis, 279 P. 546, 548, 130 Or. 148.

(5) "An agreement to do or not to do a particular act in the future."—Board of Education for Jefferson County v. Mill Creek Methodist Church, South, 45 S.W.2d 1026, 1029, 242 Ky. 147.

(6) "A contract under seal, made by the parties, in which they mutually state what is to be performed by each."—Woods v. Woods, 44 N.C. 290, 291.

ment of the parties and is binding on both,¹³ whereas a covenant is in the words,¹⁴ and is a promise or an agreement, of the covenantor only.¹⁵ They are further distinguished in that, while a "covenant" is sometimes defined as a promise or agreement under seal to do or not to do a particular thing, the office of a "condition" is generally to indicate the terms on which a certain right will arise, or continue, or be defeated.¹⁶

The chief distinction between a condition and a covenant pertains to the remedy in event of a breach.¹⁷ Thus the agreement is a condition if a breach thereof pertains to the validity of the instrument or, as in the case of a condition subsequent, is a ground for forfeiture;¹⁸ but the agreement is a covenant if the remedy for a breach is merely an action at law for damages,¹⁹ although equitable relief in such case has also been held to be available.²⁰

Whether a particular provision is a condition or a covenant depends on the intention of the parties to the instrument,²¹ or, in the case of a will, on the intent of the testator,²² and on the contract and the circumstances.²³

As distinguished from an easement, which is a claim on lands, a covenant is a personal undertaking.²⁴

c. Consideration and Validity

A covenant must be valid and must be supported by a consideration.

Unless the instrument is sealed and a consideration is unnecessary, a covenant, like other contracts, must be supported by a sufficient consideration²⁵ which may, in a particular case, consist of a detriment suffered by the covenantee caused by a breach of the covenant.²⁶

Validity and legality. A covenant must express the purpose of the parties thereto;²⁷ to be valid or enforceable, it must not be too indefinite,²⁸ and it must not be contrary to public policy.²⁹

Where one of several covenants in a contract is held illegal and void, the balance of the contract, including the remaining covenants, may be enforceable so far as it is not prohibited by public policy.³⁰

§ 2. Express Covenants

An express covenant is one explicitly stated in words.

An express covenant is a covenant explicitly stated in words,³¹ while an implied covenant, as is defined in § 9 infra, is one which is inferred or imputed in law from the words used.

A covenant in fact or in deed is one which is expressly agreed between the parties in specified terms;³² a covenant expressed in words, or inserted in a deed in specific terms.³³

§ 3. — Parties

A covenantor need not necessarily possess more than a limited estate in order to make a valid covenant, or, in certain cases, any estate at all; but the covenantee may not be a stranger to the deed.

The person who makes the covenant is known as the covenantor,³⁴ while the covenantee is he to whom the covenant is made.³⁵

Any person sui juris, although owning only a limited estate, may make a valid covenant.³⁶ Furthermore, there is nothing to prevent a person from warranting title to land that he neither owns nor claims,³⁷ although it has been held that a person, conveying with warranty the interest he expects to inherit, is not bound by such warranty.³⁸

A grantor cannot covenant with a stranger to the deed;³⁹ and the covenantee must be privy to some present agreement by the covenantor.⁴⁰

§ 4. — Formal Requisites in General

No particular form of words is essential to the creation of a covenant, although the covenant must usually be in writing, and, when embodied in a deed, the deed itself must be valid unless the covenant is entirely collateral or independent.

No precise or set form of words is necessary to make a covenant.⁴¹ The intent of the parties controls,⁴² and any words that amount to or import an agreement are sufficient.⁴³ An express covenant must be reduced to writing⁴⁴ and generally must state the name of the person covenanting.⁴⁵

It has been stated broadly that an express covenant can be created only by deed,⁴⁶ the cases supporting the rule being, however, apparently limited to those involving covenants of title,⁴⁷ such as a covenant of warranty,⁴⁸ or other covenants relating to and affecting land, as, for example, a covenant restricting the use of the land,⁴⁹ or an agreement to pay taxes on the land⁵⁰ or to maintain a boundary fence⁵¹ or a bridge⁵² or for a right to overflow adjoining land.⁵³ It is generally held, in such case, that the deed must itself be valid and binding in order to effect the validity of the covenant,⁵⁴ but this rule does not apply to collateral and independent covenants;⁵⁵ and it has been held, as well, that a personal covenant in a deed may be binding on the obligor notwithstanding the deed itself was invalid because it was not properly witnessed.⁵⁶

§ 5. — Statutory Forms

As is discussed in § 10, statutory provisions in some jurisdictions determine the covenants which shall be implied from the use of particular terms in conveyances. Other statutes, as shown in § 11, abolish implied covenants.

Where conditions precedent to the operation of the instrument exist, they must be fulfilled before the instrument can become effective.⁶⁰

§ 8. — Acceptance of Deed Containing Covenants on Part of Grantee

As a general rule, a grantee's acceptance of a deed containing a covenant on his part is equivalent to an agreement by him to perform the covenant.

As a general rule, in some instances under statutes specifically so providing, the acceptance of a deed, whether poll or inter partes, containing a covenant on the part of the grantee is equivalent to an agreement on his part to perform the same,⁶¹ and it is immaterial that the deed is not signed,⁶² sealed,⁶³ or executed⁶⁴ by him.

The rule is not without qualification, however,⁶⁵ and, in addition, great lack of judicial harmony exists, in some instances among courts of the same state, as to the nature of the grantee's liability, some cases holding that it rests as on an express covenant,⁶⁶ while others contend that it rests only on and is not changed into a contract of a higher nature.—Cram v. Bangor House, 12 Me. 354.

Delivery in escrow

Where a deed delivered to a bank to be held in escrow for the purchaser of realty was never delivered, due to the purchaser's discovery of false representations by the vendor, it was held that the deed did not become operative and that no cause of action in favor of the purchaser accrued by reason of the covenants of the deed.—Drake v. Nunn, 97 So. 211, 210 Ala. 136.

60. Securing required number of signatures

(1) Where a specified number of signatures to the instrument must be secured before it becomes operative, such condition must be complied with.—Foster v. Stewart, 25 P. 2d 497, 134 Cal.App. 482—Oberwise v. Poulos, 12 P.2d 156, 124 Cal.App. 247.

(2) A neighborhood scheme of restrictions as to the use or occupancy of property by members of a certain race must be universal and reciprocal since the theory of such a scheme is that the restrictions are a benefit to all, the consideration for the imposition of the restrictions on each lot being that the same restrictions are imposed on all of the other lots.—Thornhill v. Herdt, Mo.App., 130 S.W. 2d 175.

(3) One signing such an instrument cannot withdraw his signature until after a reasonable time for procuring the other signatures; and what constitutes a reasonable time is determined by considering the nature of the contract, the diligence used, and all the facts and circumstances.—Russell v. Wallace, 30 F.2d 981, 58 App.D.C. 357, certiorari denied 49 S.Ct. 512, 279 U.S. 371, 73 L.Ed. 1007.

Knowledge of covenant presumed

The grantee is presumed to have had knowledge of the existence of a covenant in a deed which he accepted, and it is not necessary that there should be a formal promise on his part to assume the obligation thereof.—Dutton v. Locke-Paddon, 174 P. 674, 37 Cal.App. 693.

In South Carolina, in a case involving the question of whether a grantee is bound by covenants in a deed poll, the court held that, if a written, formal acceptance were necessary to bind the grantee, it could not be charged in the instant case because the acceptance actually written and signed by the grantee was neither witnessed nor probated as required by law.—Epting v. Lexington Water Power Co., 181 S.E. 66, 177 S.C. 308, 102 A.L.R. 773.

an implied undertaking.⁶⁷

As appears in the C.J.S. title Estoppel § 18, also 21 C.J. p 1073 notes 48, 53, while the acceptance of a deed poll will not estop the grantee to deny the grantor's title, the rule is well settled in a number of jurisdictions that, where the deed contains agreements or covenants to be performed by the grantee, his acceptance of the deed estops him to deny them.

§ 9. Implied Covenants in General

An implied covenant is one inferred or implied in law from the words used and is based on the presumed intention of the parties. Such covenants are not favored.

An implied covenant is one which is inferred or imputed in law from the words used,⁶⁸ for example, in a deed⁶⁹ or, as appears in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant, §§ 235-243, also 35 C.J. p 1184 note 48, p 1189 note 45, in a lease. Such covenants depend for their existence on the intendment and construction of law⁷⁰ and are based on the presumed intention of the parties.⁷¹ Implied warranties are not favored by the common law,⁷² and the tendency of modern decisions is not to imply covenants which might and ought to have been expressed if intended.⁷³ An implied covenant must rest on a satisfactory basis in the express contract of the parties,⁷⁴ and it must appear that it was so clearly in their contemplation that they deemed it unnecessary to express it and, therefore, omitted to do so, or it must appear that it is necessary to imply such a covenant in order to give effect to and effectuate the purpose of the contract as a whole.⁷⁵

Under an executory agreement to sell specific real estate, there is an implied warranty that the title shall be good⁷⁶ and that the same shall be free from encumbrance;⁷⁷ but such warranty exists only so long as the contract remains executory and does not carry over into the deed.⁷⁸

As a rule, no covenant of title,⁷⁹ quantity,⁸⁰ or freedom from encumbrance,⁸¹ or as to the condi-

Obligation enforceable in equity

Acceptance of title to land subject to restrictive covenant imposes obligation enforceable in equity against grantee.—Vogeler v. Alwyn Improvement Corporation, 159 N.E. 886, 247 N.Y. 131, reversing 222 N.Y. S. 918, 220 App.Div. 829.

Creates simple contract only

A recital in warranty deed that deed was made subject to betterment assessment which grantees, who did not sign or seal deed, assumed to pay, created only a simple contract when grantees accepted the deed.—Fred T. Ley & Co. v. Sagalyn, Mass., 19 N.E.2d 687.

68. Cal.—O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 95 P. 873, 96 P. 323, 153 Cal. 502.

Other definition

"An implied covenant is one which may reasonably be inferred from the whole agreement and the circumstances attending its execution. Implication when used in that sense is synonymous with intention."—Brimmer v. Union Oil Co. of California, C.C.A.Wyo., 81 F.2d 437, 105 A.L.R. 454, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 833, 298 U.S. 658, 80 L.Ed. 1391.

Legal necessity

"Implied covenants can be justified only on the ground of legal necessity. It is not enough merely to say fairness, prudence, or wisdom demanded it under the circumstances. It must be necessary to the operation of the contract, or of words found in it or effectuation of the intention of the parties, made manifest by their words."—Belle-Mead Lumber Co. v. Turnbull, W.Va., 87 S.E. 382, 384.

tion of the property,⁸² will be implied from the fact of the conveyance of real property, although it has been held that the transfer of a certificate for land issued by the state to a discharged soldier implies a warranty of title;⁸³ and it has also been held that in case of exchange or partition of land a covenant of title may be implied,⁸⁴ but there is authority to the contrary.⁸⁵ However, except where implied covenants have been abolished by statute, see infra § 11, where, from the text of an agreement under seal, either in the body of the instrument or in its references, there is manifested a clear intention that one of the parties shall do or forbear to do certain acts, a covenant to that effect will be implied.⁸⁶ So, too, where land is conveyed with full covenants, and it is at the time in possession of a tenant, an agreement to accept the deed and the tenant's possession as the possession of the purchaser will be inferred, where nothing appears to the contrary, and the purchaser has full knowledge of the tenancy and the rights of the tenant.⁸⁷

In some jurisdictions, warranty is an incident of every sale where the parties do not agree otherwise;⁸⁸ but this applies only to a voluntary sale, a bargaining, a trafficking and an agreement, a giving of consent, and does not apply to transfers in invitum.⁸⁹

§ 10. — Statutory Provisions in General

In many jurisdictions, by statutory provision, certain covenants are implied from designated words in conveyances. Such statutes are strictly construed and only the covenants provided for will be implied and they only from the designated words.

In many jurisdictions the statutes provide that covenants of title shall be implied from the use of particular words in conveyances of realty,⁹⁰ and, under some statutes, from such words not only in deeds executed, but also in articles of agreement for the conveyance of land,⁹¹ and in mortgages.⁹² Such statutes, however, have been held not to apply to quitclaim deeds;⁹³ nor, in some jurisdictions, to deeds which do not purport to convey an absolute estate in fee,⁹⁴ or to transfers of personality.⁹⁵ Under the operation of such statutes, the implied covenants are to be read into the deed as if they had been separately written therein at full length,⁹⁶ and are as effective as if they had been expressly inserted in the conveyance;⁹⁷ but covenants other than those provided for will not be implied.⁹⁸ Although there is authority to the contrary,⁹⁹ it is generally held that such statutes, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed.¹ Hence, although the rule is not strictly enforced in some jurisdictions,² it is generally held that, in order to constitute the statutory covenants, the words of the statute must be strictly followed,³ and that the use of different words,⁴ or of more⁵ or less⁶ than all the words implying the covenant is insufficient. Under statutes which provide that the covenants are implied only against acts done or suffered by the grantor, the word "suffered" implies reasonable control, and does not apply to defects not caused by the act of the grantor, nor within his power to prevent,⁷ but it also implies that it is not confined to the voluntary acts of the grantor.⁸ Under some statutes a grantor, who in a deed of land represents himself to be the owner, warrants the title, but such representation must be found in the deed.⁹

Covenant to repair

Under a statute providing that no covenant shall be implied in any conveyance of real estate, whether

Under some statutes, and subject, in some jurisdictions, to certain specified exceptions, no covenant shall be implied in a conveyance, whether the conveyance contains any special covenant or not,¹⁰ although in some jurisdictions the prohibition is applicable solely to conveyances of real property, that is, of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and not to conveyances generally, nor to conveyances of interests in real property,¹¹ nor, as appears in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant, § 236, also 15 C.J. p 1214 note 58, to leases. In jurisdictions where such statutes are in force no implied covenant arises from a conveyance of real property.¹² After a contract of sale of realty has become executed and the conveyance accepted, the grantee must rely solely on the covenants in his deed,¹³ and if his deed such conveyance contains special covenants or not, a deed which grants plaintiff a mill lot, bounded on one side by the canal or race, on condition that the plaintiff make one third of all necessary repairs on the dam or race, cannot be construed as covenanting that the grantors will make the other two thirds of such repairs.—*Koch v. § 12. — Words of Conveyance in General

Except as provided otherwise by statute, covenants will not ordinarily be implied from the use of words of conveyance usual and necessary in deeds.

Unless provided otherwise by statute, for which see infra § 13, and with the exception of the words "do" or "dedi" in deeds of feoffment,¹⁵ or except with reference to contracts which are not a conveyance of land,¹⁶ as in the case of a lease, considered in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant § 239, also 35 C.J. p 1187 note 4, a covenant will not be implied from the use of words usual and necessary in a conveyance, such as "grant," "bargain," "sell," "convey," and "warrant."¹⁷ However, in some jurisdictions, under the law therein, a warranty is presumed unless expressly waived;¹⁸ and, under some statutes, if specified statutory forms for deeds are followed the covenants usual in conveyances at common law are implied therein.¹⁹

§ 13. — Particular Words

In many jurisdictions, by express statutory provision, particular words such as "grant, bargain and sell," "convey and warrant," etc., imply specified covenants, such as covenants of seizin, of quiet enjoyment, against encumbrances, for further assurance, of good right to convey, and of general warranty.

Under statutes providing that certain covenants shall be implied from the use of specified words in conveyances of realty, it has been held that the use of the word or words specified implies a covenant of seizin;²⁰ a covenant of quiet enjoyment;²¹

Against encumbrances

Conveyance of Florida lands by agent, holding bare legal title, to his principal, already entitled thereto in equity, cannot be construed as carrying with it a covenant against encumbrances, especially in view of law of Florida, according to which it must be interpreted, word "grant" not implying such covenant under law of that state.—Henry v. Substantial compliance required

In order for an instrument to carry the covenants specified in the statute, it must not only be "a warranty deed" but it must be made in substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute.—Langford v. Newsom, Tex.Com.App., 220 S.W. 544, affirming Newsom v. Langford, Civ. App., 174 S.W. 1036.

General covenant of warranty

General warranty deed

(1) In Illinois, there is implied in a warranty deed, in substance in the form provided by statute, a covenant against encumbrances.—Jones v. Taylor, 261 Ill.App. 403.

(2) In Oklahoma, a general warranty deed made in compliance with the statute contains by operation of law a warranty of seizin as well as of right to convey and certain other covenants of warranty.

a covenant against encumbrances;²² a covenant for further assurance;²³ a covenant of general warranty;²⁴ a covenant of good right to convey;²⁵ and a covenant that previous to the time of the execution of the conveyance, the grantor has not conveyed the same estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, to any person other than the grantee.²⁶

§ 14. — Language of Express Covenants

Covenants may be implied from the language of express covenants in order to effectuate their intention, but they will not be implied where they were purposely withheld or as to matter specifically covered by express covenants.

Covenants may be implied in an instrument in which there are express covenants;²⁷ and such covenants may be implied from the language of express covenants in order to effectuate their clear intention and give them their full and beneficial operation.²⁸ Thus, a covenant of general warranty has been held to include a covenant of quiet enjoyment,²⁹ but not to imply a covenant of seizin.³⁰ However, a covenant will not be implied when it appears to have been purposely withheld,³¹ or as to a matter which the instrument contains an express covenant in regard to,³² or which is specifically covered by the written terms of the contract;³³ and, as appears infra § 32, express covenants exclude inconsistent implied covenants and in some jurisdictions exclude all implied statutory covenants. No other warranty can be implied in a deed which contains only a covenant of special warranty.³⁴

§ 15. — Recitals

A covenant may be implied from a recital, but the courts are not favorable thereto.

A covenant expressed by way of recital may be as obligatory as if expressed in the formal part of the agreement;³⁵ but the courts are cautious in construing a covenant out of a recital in a deed and in many cases have refused to imply them therefrom.³⁶

§ 16. — Description of Premises

A covenant will not be implied from matter descriptive of the premises, so statements as to the quantity of land conveyed will not imply a covenant for that amount, unless an intention to assure that particular quantity is apparent; however, the conveyance of land described as bounded by a street or way or by reference to a map or plat designating certain portions of the land as streets or ways creates an implied covenant that such street or way exists, provided the grantor owns the soil beneath such street or way.

No covenant will be implied from matter contained in a deed merely descriptive of the premises conveyed,³⁷ and when land is conveyed as bounded by an adjoining owner, there is no covenant that a conventional line pointed out by the parties is the true line.³⁸

As respects quantity of land. It is only when it is apparent that the deed was intended to assure a particular quantity of land to the purchaser that a covenant as to quantity can be implied.³⁹ As a general rule, the statement of the quantity of land conveyed in the deed will be construed merely as

matter of description, and implies no covenant that the land contains the quantity stated unless clearly so expressed.⁴⁰ So, where land is sold in bulk for a lump sum,⁴¹ as where the land is particularly described by metes and bounds, or other known specifications, with a statement as to the number of acres added,⁴² a covenant for quantity will not be implied, and there is no right to relief for a variation in the quantity, unless the excess or deficiency in the quantity conveyed is so great as to justify an inference of fraud or mistake equivalent to fraud,⁴³ for the reason that in such a sale quantity is not of the essence of the contract,⁴⁴ and should there be a deficiency in the quantity, the right to relief is founded on fraud, misrepresentation, or gross mistake.⁴⁵ However, the rule is otherwise where an intention is clearly manifest to regard the quantity stated as an essential element of the contract,⁴⁶ as where the land conveyed is sold by the acre,⁴⁷ or where the boundaries of the land conveyed can only be fixed by the quantity,⁴⁸ or, according to some authorities, where land is sold in gross for a sum certain on a statement of the quantity;⁴⁹ and where land is described by metes and bounds, and includes land which the grantor did not own, so that the deed of the grantor fails to convey to the grantee title to a part of the land it purports to convey, the grantor is liable on his warranty for the quantity of land his deed fails to convey good title to.⁵⁰

As respects streets and ways. The conveyance of land described as bounded by a street or way or by reference to a map or plat which designates certain portions of the land to be used as streets cre-

Public lands

A covenant of general warranty of title is breached where a part of the land within the boundaries of the land described in the deed is covered by navigable waters and as such belongs to the public, and the grantee is entitled to recover damages for the breach of the warranty, which should be estimated on the basis of the number of acres to which title failed.—Hynes v. Packard, Tex.Civ.App., 44 S.W. 548.

ates an implied covenant that such street or way exists,⁵¹ provided the grantor owns the soil beneath such street or way, or has the right to grant a right of way in such street or way,⁵² and, although in a few early cases a different view is expressed,⁵³ as a general rule, a covenant is implied that the grantee shall have the use of such street or way as a means of passage to and from his premises, which use passes as appurtenant to the grantee's estate,⁵⁴ the rule being manifestly founded on the doctrine of estoppel.⁵⁵ So, where land is granted to another and described as abutting on a street or alley, when there is in fact no such street or alley, but a strip of the grantor's land is left abutting the tract so conveyed, there arises an implied covenant that a street shall remain open thereon for the public use.⁵⁶ However, if the grantor is not the owner of the adjacent land described in the boundary as a street or way, or does not have the right to grant a right of way therein, there is no implied covenant that there is such a way or street;⁵⁷ and where an owner files a plan subdividing land into lots, which plan is recorded, a subsequent conveyance, the purpose of which is not to follow but to abandon the plan, does not give the grantee a right of passage in or over a street shown on the plan.⁵⁸ So where a grantor bounds the premises by a public highway which was closed at the time the deed was made, and the grantee knew or was bound to know that fact, there is no implied covenant that the highway existed.⁵⁹ Also, a boundary on a street as exhibited on a plan, but not yet laid out in fact, will not carry an absolute right to have such street even as against the lessor and those claiming under him, where, by an act of the legislature, no streets in the city laid out by individuals could be established as public streets, until they were approved and accepted by the corporation, which did not accept them, but laid out other streets in a manner entirely different from and inconsistent with them.⁶⁰ Where the transfers are in invitum the deeds will not warrant the existence of streets.⁶¹ An implied covenant as to the existence of a street or way prevents the grantor from changing its location; and the grantor or those holding under him are prohibited from altering the location,⁶² and, although in some jurisdictions, no covenant will be implied that the street or way is of the width set out in the conveyance,⁶³ in other jurisdictions the covenant applies so as to prevent any narrowing of the width of the street or way,⁶⁴ especially where the width of such street or way seems to have been a substantial part of the contract.⁶⁵ A covenant will not be implied that the street or way has been actually opened and put into condition for use, but only that it has been laid out;⁶⁶ nor will a covenant be implied that the street or way will be made and maintained fit for travel.⁶⁷ So, it has been held that the descriptive words as to the street or way, particularly if the deed refers to an accompanying plan of lots or streets, are not to be understood merely as signifying that the street in question is coextensive with the lot conveyed, but that its extent, direction, and termini are to be such as are delineated on the plan, or otherwise indicated by the deed,⁶⁸ but this does not apply to the streets not adjacent to, but lying in the vicinity of, the land granted as to which there is no implied agreement that they shall remain as platted,⁶⁹ and the implied covenant that the streets and ways

Impossible to grant easement in public highway

The only easement which by possibility could be even claimed from the words of the deed, if construed as more than mere description, would be a right in common with the public over a public highway, and that, if it existed, the grantor could not effectually convey, and so it could not be appurtenant to the land and pass by reason of the grantor's bounding the premises thereby.—King v. named in the plot of a proposed town referred to in a deed shall be open to public use goes no further than the streets on which the lot faces and such other convenient streets as may be required to give a convenient way to the public roads.⁷⁰

However, while these cases use the terminology of covenants, they are not readily distinguishable from the cases of implied easements created by the conveyance of realty with reference to a map or plat on which streets and ways are delineated or by the conveyance of land described as bounded by a road, street or alley, considered extensively in the title Easements C.J.S. §§ 39-40, also 19 C. J. p 928 note 61-p 934 note 49, and are probably not cases of true covenants.

§ 17. — Reservations

A reservation in a deed will be construed as an implied covenant on the part of the grantee, if it cannot be construed as an exception.

Where a reservation in a deed cannot be construed as an exception, as where the thing reserved is not a part of that previously granted, it will be construed as an implied covenant on the part of the grantee.⁷¹ There will not be implied a negative covenant on the part of the grantor not to use the ungranted portion of a copyright estate to the detriment of the licensed estate, where the rights to the ungranted portion is expressly reserved to the grantor.⁷²

§ 18. — Conditions

Words of proviso and condition will not be construed to constitute a covenant unless the whole instrument shows an agreement or engagement to do or not to do some act on the part of the person sought to be charged, except that, in case of doubt as to whether a provision was intended as a condition subsequent which would cause a forfeiture or a covenant, the breach of which may be compensated in damages, it will be construed as a covenant.

Although it has been held that words of proviso and condition will not be construed into words of covenant unless it can be collected from the whole instrument that there was, on the part of the person sought to be charged, an agreement or engagement to do or not to do some act,⁷³ yet since, as appears in the title Contracts § 407, forfeitures are not favored either in law or in equity, conditions subsequent, in as much as they tend to destroy estates are not favored in law, and except where implied covenants are abolished by statute, considered supra § 11, if it is reasonably doubtful whether a provision in a conveyance was intended as a condition subsequent or a covenant, the breach of which may be compensated in damages, it will be held to be a covenant;⁷⁴ and it has even been held that this rule applies in some cases to express conditions,⁷⁵ if necessary to avoid a forfeiture;⁷⁶ but it has also been held that, where the language imports a condition merely, without any words importing an agreement, it cannot be enforced as a covenant, but the only remedy is through forfeiture of the estate.⁷⁷

§ 19. — Restrictions on Use of Property

Restrictions as to the use of property are not favored and will not be implied, unless clearly established.

The laws favors the free and unrestricted use of property, resolving doubts and ambiguities in favor thereof.⁷⁸ Equity will not infer a negative covenant, except where equity and justice requires;⁷⁹ and such a covenant must be clearly implied and understood by all the parties,⁸⁰ and should not be implied, unless it is indispensable to carry the intention of the parties into effect.⁸¹ So, although restrictive covenants as to the use of property, when reasonable and within the policy of the law, are valid,⁸² they are not favored,⁸³ and will not be implied unless clearly established.⁸⁴ They will not be inferred from the absence of words of restriction;⁸⁵ but, if not created by express words, must be shown by reasonable inferences from words employed, clearly indicative of such a purpose.⁸⁶ Where no general plan is adopted and followed, equity will not impose a restriction on lots sold beyond that expressed in the plan and contracts,⁸⁷ and will not imply a covenant not to sell lots of smaller dimensions than those indicated on a plan from the mere making of a map and sale of lots with reference thereto.⁸⁸ Building restrictions may be created by a recorded plat.⁸⁹ A building line may be established by express language in the legend on a recorded plat;⁹⁰ but, although there is authority to the contrary,⁹¹ it has been held that a mere designated line drawn on a map or plat of property, without more, will not suffice to create a covenant establishing a building line.⁹²

II. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION

A. COVENANTS IN GENERAL

§ 20. General Rules of Construction

The primary rule in the construction of covenants is that the intention of the parties controls. In determining such intention, the covenant is construed, as the parties have construed it and as against the covenantor; words employed usually are assigned their ordinary meaning.

Where the language of a covenant is unambiguous, clear, and specific, the rule, similar to that adopted in the construction of statutes, is that no room is left either for interpretation or for construction.⁹³ Otherwise, however, the paramount rule for the interpretation of covenants is so to Use for apartments and stores

Restrictions on the use of property for apartments and stores must be clearly established and strictly construed.—Kitchens v. Noland, 158 S.E. 562, 172 Ga. 684.

Line with words "building line"

A broken or dotted line, appearing on recorded plat of subdivision, together with words "25' building line" printed thereunder without reference to building line in legend of plat, is insufficient to establish building restriction.—Bernard v. Winkley, Mo. App., 130 S.W.2d 196.

expound them as to give effect to the actual intent of the parties,⁹⁴ as of the time the covenant was made,⁹⁵ and as collected from the whole instrument⁹⁶ construed in connection with the circumstances surrounding its execution,⁹⁷ with a view to support, rather than to defeat, the instrument.⁹⁸ Nothing should be read into the language of a covenant extending its meaning beyond what its language fairly imports.⁹⁹

Ordinary or technical meaning. The language of a covenant must be read in an ordinary or popular, and not in a legal or technical, sense.¹ It has been said that technical words should be construed as they are understood by scientific men and mechanics acquainted with the business in regard to which the covenant is made;² but, since intent, and not words, is the essence of every agreement,³ it would seem that such words are to be construed, if possible, to effectuate the intent of the parties,⁴ and hence according to their accustomed meaning as used and understood by the community at large, unless the circumstances and context indicate that a different meaning was intended.⁵

Practical construction. Where the language of a covenant is ambiguous, the construction placed thereon by the parties may properly be considered,⁶ and is the best evidence of their intention.⁷

Construction against covenantor. Covenants will be most strongly construed against the covenantor,⁸ at least where the terms used therein are equivocal,⁹ and except in the case of covenants of forfeiture,¹⁰ or, as is shown supra § 13, in the case of statutory covenants implied from the use of particular words. As is shown in the C.J.S. title Deeds § 163, also 18 C.J. p 387 note 19, restrictive covenants in deeds are generally strictly construed against the person seeking to enforce them.

fra, the construction of covenants running with the land is generally governed by the lex loci rei sitae.

§ 22. Real or Personal Covenants

Real, as distinguished from personal, covenants are those so closely connected with the realty that their benefit or burden passes with it. Various covenants have been held to be real or personal covenants.

All covenants are either real or personal.¹² The rule has been broadly stated that real covenants are those so closely connected with the realty that their benefit or burden passes with it,¹³ and that all others, as, for example, those intended to bind the covenantor only and not to become a charge on the realty, are considered personal covenants.¹⁴ It is not enough that a covenant should merely concern real estate in order to render it a real covenant.¹⁵

Covenants of seizin, right to convey, and against encumbrances. Personal covenants have been held to embrace some of the ordinary covenants of title to realty, which ordinarily are broken, if at all, when made, as appears infra §§ 37, 40-42, as that the grantor is lawfully seized,¹⁶ that he has good right to convey,¹⁷ and that the land is free from encumbrance.¹⁸

However, it has also been held, as to covenants of seizin and of right to convey, that they may be either personal or real; that, if they once attach to the land, as for example, where the grantor is in actual adverse possession at the time of the delivery of the deed, they are real;¹⁹ and, as appears infra § 63 as to covenants of seizin, the general rule that such covenants do not run with the land is, by many authorities, limited to cases in which no possession accompanies the deed.

Covenant for quiet enjoyment is not strictly personal.²⁰

Covenant for quiet enjoyment as running with land see infra § 66.

Covenant of warranty. The old common-law warranty which, as is shown infra § 47, was applicable only to estates of freehold, was in its nature essentially real,²¹ although it seems that, when necessary to prevent a failure of justice, it might be construed as a personal covenant where it could not operate as a covenant real.²²

In the United States the old common-law warranty has, as is shown infra § 37, been superseded by a set of covenants. Of these, the covenant of warranty has, in a number of cases, been regarded as personal,²³ at least in the sense that it is not a real covenant within the meaning of the ancient feudal law,²⁴ or at least as imposing on the covenantor a personal liability sufficient to support a personal action of covenant,²⁵ as distinguished from the liability which was imposed on the warrantor by the ancient common-law warranty and which was enforceable by warrantia charta.²⁶ However, the covenant of warranty has also expressly been designated as a real covenant;²⁷ and, as appears infra § 68, it has been held to run with the land.

Other covenants. Other covenants which have been held to be personal include a proviso in a deed that any sale of the property by the grantee should be to the grantor at the original price,²⁸ a warranty by a grantor who has only a life estate,²⁹ a covenant by an assignee in bankruptcy for himself, his heirs and assigns,³⁰ and covenants in a deed limiting the use of other land of the grantor adjoining that conveyed.³¹

§ 23. Collateral and Auxiliary Covenants

A collateral covenant is one connected with a thing granted, but which does not run with the land; an auxiliary covenant is one in aid of, and dependent on, a principal covenant.

A collateral covenant is one made in connection with a thing granted, but which does not run with the land.³² If it is in restraint of the objects of the principal covenants which have been substantially performed, it will not be enforced in equity.³³

An auxiliary covenant differs from a collateral covenant in that it is dependent on the fate of the principal covenant,³⁴ while on a collateral covenant the covenantor is liable, although the conveyance is void.³⁵

§ 24. Alternative and Disjunctive Covenants

Alternative or disjunctive covenants, construable according to the parties' intent, give the covenantor an election to perform either of the covenants.

Alternative or disjunctive covenants in the proper legal sense of the term are those which give an election to the party bound by them to perform one or the other of the acts to which they relate,³⁶ and by the fulfillment of one covenant to discharge himself wholly from the performance of the other.³⁷

Such covenants are to be construed according to the manifest intent of the parties.³⁸

§ 25. Dependent or Independent Covenants

As distinguished from an independent covenant, a dependent covenant is one where performance by one party is conditioned on, and subject to, performance by the other.

Generally, covenants are said to be dependent when they are such that the thing covenanted to be done on the part of each party enters into the whole consideration for the covenant on the other part,³⁹ or where the acts or covenants of the parties are concurrent and are to be done or performed at the same time.⁴⁰

An independent covenant has been defined to be one which goes only to a part of the consideration on both sides, and a breach of which may be paid for in damages,⁴¹ although it has been held that this is not a conclusive test.⁴² Two covenants are independent where both cannot be performed,⁴³ or where something is to be done on one side before the whole can be performed by the other,⁴⁴ and, if the covenants are once established to be independent covenants, they continue so throughout.⁴⁵

Where covenants, although mutual, are independent, either party may recover damages from the other for an injury which he may have sustained by reason of nonperformance, although he has failed to comply with the stipulations on his part;⁴⁶ but, where the covenants are dependent on each other, the rule is otherwise, and neither party may maintain an action against the other without averring and proving performance on his part.⁴⁷ The question whether covenants are dependent or independent does not arise where the breach of one covenant is offered as a set-off against the breach of another,⁴⁸ but only where the nonperformance of one covenant is pleaded as a direct and preëemptory bar to an action on another.⁴⁹

Determination of character. While the order of time in which covenants are to be performed is an important consideration in determining whether they are dependent or independent,⁵⁰ it is difficult to lay down any general principle by which to determine what covenants are dependent and what independent,⁵¹ the cases being agreed that this question must be determined by the intention and meaning of the parties as it appears in the instrument,⁵² and by the application of common sense to each particular case,⁵³ to which intention, when once discovered, all technical forms of expression must yield.⁵⁴

clined to construe covenants to be dependent,⁵⁵ although it has also been said to be safest, when the intention of the parties is doubtful, to construe their covenants to be independent.⁵⁶

§ 26. Parties to Covenants in General

Although a grantor covenants only for his heirs, etc., as a general rule he is personally bound. A fiduciary ordinarily is bound by his covenants.

As a general rule, a grantor will be held personally bound, even though he covenants only for his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns,⁵⁷ although there is some authority to the contrary;⁵⁸ and covenants which, by statute, are implied from the use of particular words, see supra § 13, are restrained, as against the grantor, by a covenant expressly limited to the heirs, executors, and administrators of the grantor.⁵⁹

Fiduciaries. As a general rule, persons acting in a fiduciary capacity are held personally bound by their covenants,⁶⁰ even though expressly made in such capacity.⁶¹ Thus a guardian may be held personally liable on his covenants of warranty contained in a deed of his ward's estate, even though the estate was sold under a license of the probate court;⁶² and, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁶³ or of a manifest intention to the contrary expressed on the face of the paper,⁶⁴ a warranty clause in a deed made by a trustee, as such, will bind him personally.⁶⁵ Furthermore, executors or administrators who sell their decedent's real estate under a court order are personally liable on their covenants of warranty.⁶⁶

However, one covenanting in a fiduciary capacity may limit his liability by the use of language clearly showing that it was not his intention to become personally bound,⁶⁷ as, for example, where an executor warrants the title in so far as it is vested in him as executor.⁶⁸

§ 27. Joint or Several Covenants

Covenantors may covenant jointly or severally, or jointly and severally, and may be bound severally, although having joint interests; an obligation created by two or more ordinarily is presumed to be joint.

As a rule covenantors may covenant jointly or severally, or jointly and severally,⁶⁹ and, it seems, they may be bound severally, although their interests are joint.⁷⁰ A several covenant is a covenant by two or more, separately;⁷¹ one made so as to bind the parties severally or individually;⁷² the covenant of one with another.⁷³ Where a grantee of land devises it in severalty to his heirs, the heirs have been held to have a joint interest in the covenants in their ancestor's deed.⁷⁴

Except as to reimbursement of the purchase price,⁷⁵ the obligation of a joint vendor extends to the entire title,⁷⁶ and, where an obligation is created by two or more, the general presumption is that it is joint,⁷⁷ and words of severance are necessary to overcome this primary presumption.⁷⁸ This rule does not, however, apply to covenants joint in form made by husband and wife in conveyances of the husband's property,⁷⁹ unless it appears that the sole consideration for the deed was received by her and was by her husband so intended.⁸⁰

As a general rule, the question as to whether the liability incurred is joint or several, or joint and several, is to be determined by looking at the words of the covenant.⁸¹ By some authorities this test is exclusive,⁸² the subject matter of the contract and the interests of the parties assuming the liability being regarded as having nothing to do with the question.⁸³ On the other hand, however, it has been held that, where from the subject matter of the covenants it is the evident intent of the parties that they should be taken distributively, they may be so taken, although there are no words

Covenantees. As to covenantees, the rule generally upheld, although there is early authority apparently to the contrary,⁸⁵ is that, if the language of the covenant is capable of being so construed, it will be taken to be joint or several according to the interest of the parties to it.⁸⁶

§ 28. Subject Matter in General

In determining the subject matter of a covenant the intention of the parties controls.

In determining the subject matter of a covenant, it is the duty of the court to give effect to the lawful intent of the parties.⁸⁷ When the language employed is so ambiguous and contradictory as to leave the intention of the parties doubtful, the court should then call to its aid the surrounding circumstances, the object had in view by the parties, and their state and condition.⁸⁸

Covenants restricting alienation to negroes

(1) While in the strictest sense a negro is not an "Ethiopian," the latter term, as used in a deed in a restrictive covenant against alienation to "any person of Ethiopian race or descent," will be deemed to have been used in its popular sense and to include negroes.—White v. White, 150 S.E. 531, 532, 103 W.Va. 128, 66 A.L.R. 518.

(2) The term "negroes" in a restrictive covenant against alienation to members of that race is synonymous with the term "colored persons;" hence, it includes a woman of one-eighth negro blood and her husband of three-fourths negro blood.—Ridgway v. Cockburn, 296 N.Y.S. 936, 940, 163 Misc. 511.

(3) Covenant restricting disposal of lots to colored persons was for protection of property to which covenants applied, and restriction was not affected by similar conditions which might arise in adjoining property, as respects right of lot owners to have restriction removed on ground that adjoining territory was occupied by colored persons.—Grady v. Garland, 89 F.2d 817, 67 App.D.C. 73, certiorari denied 58 S.Ct. 13, 302 U.S. 634, 82 L.Ed. 536.

§ 29. Limitations and Exceptions in General

General rules of construction of covenants apply in construing limitations and exceptions therein; exceptions and restrictions are construed strictly against the grantor.

The general rules of construction applicable to covenants, see supra §§ 20-25, govern the construction of the limitations and exceptions contained therein.⁸⁹ Where a covenant of warranty contains no exceptions, the previous mention of the existence of an encumbrance does not take it out of the covenant of warranty to defend the title against all lawful claims whatsoever.⁹⁰

Exceptions and restrictions are to be construed strictly against the grantor, and are not to be extended beyond the fair import of the language expressed except by necessary implication.⁹¹

§ 30. Limitation to Premises Conveyed

In the absence of a contrary intention, general covenants are limited to the premises purported and intended to be conveyed.

Subject to a manifest intention to the contrary,⁹² general covenants will be construed as limited to the premises purported and intended to be conveyed.⁹³

§ 31. Limitation to Estate Conveyed

Unless a contrary intention is manifested, general covenants are limited to the estate purported and intended to be conveyed.

Subject to a manifest intention to the contrary,⁹⁴ general covenants will be construed as limited to the estate purported and intended to be conveyed.⁹⁵ Thus, if a deed purports to convey the right, title, and interest of the grantor to the land described instead of conveying the land itself, a general covenant of warranty will be limited to that right or interest;⁹⁶ and, where lands are conveyed sub-

Under covenant to "use" certain product on property equipped for sale of oil, "sale" is one of "uses" to which property can be subjected, and such covenant to "use" the specified product is, under the circumstances, a covenant not to sell competing products.—*Gulf Refining Co. v. In Oklahoma, in view of Comp.St. 1921 §§ 5283, 5284, prescribing respectively forms of warranty deed and quitclaim deed, and §§ 5258, 5259, describing effect of quitclaim deed and of warranty deed, where grantors used prescribed form of warranty deed, and afterward covenanted to warrant title and hold premises unto party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, free and clear of all former grants, and inserted words "all of our right, title, and interest" immediately before description of lands conveyed, covenant refers to land described in deed, and not to right, title, and interest of

ject to encumbrance, the covenants of warranty extend only to the estate actually conveyed.⁹⁷

§ 32. Limitation by Other Covenants

Whether or not a covenant is independent of, or restricted by, other covenants in the same instrument is determined by the intention of the parties.

Where a deed contains several covenants, the courts construe them either as independent, or as restrictive, of each other according to the apparent intention of the parties.⁹⁸

Express covenants as controlling implied covenants. Express covenants, whether general or limited, ordinarily override and control inconsistent, implied covenants.⁹⁹ There is, however, some conflict of authority as to the effect of express covenants on the statutory covenants implied from the use of particular words; thus, some authorities contend that these statutory covenants are only intended to operate when the parties have omitted to insert covenants and that such implied covenants are limited and restrained by the terms of express covenants,¹ at least when the express covenants refer to the implied statutory covenants and undertake to confine their operation,² or when the covenants are so irreconcilable that they cannot all have their full force;³ and some of the cases go to the extent of holding that the implied covenants do not even arise when express covenants are inserted.⁴ On the other hand, it has been held that statutory implied covenants are not qualified or restrained by those which are expressed,⁵ at least where the implied covenants are to be construed under the statute as express covenants.⁶

However, the courts will give effect to each covenant where there is no inconsistency between the express covenant and the implied statutory covenant,⁷ or between the express covenant and an implied one not of statutory creation,⁸ or where the implied statutory and the express covenants are independent of each other.⁹

Covenants having same or different objects. Restrictive words inserted in the first of several covenants having the same object will be construed as extending to all the covenants, although they are distinct;¹⁰ but, where covenants are of materially different import and directed to different things, the general rule is that restrictive words added to one will not control the generality of the others, although they relate to the same land.¹¹ However, it has been held that a preceding special covenant against encumbrances, excluding the encumbrance in question, is to be recognized as an exception of such encumbrance from a following covenant of general warranty.¹²

General covenants as limited by restrictive covenants. A subsequent limited covenant will not restrict a preceding general covenant, unless an express intention to do so appears or the covenants are inconsistent,¹³ or unless the general covenant and the restrictive covenant appear to be connected, or there are qualifying words in the covenant itself;¹⁴ but, since the professed object of this rule is the ascertainment of the intentions of the parties to the covenant, it should not be applied when it would evidently fail of this purpose.¹⁵

§ 33. Duration of Personal Covenants

A personal covenant may be unlimited in duration, but the liability of the covenantor in such case ceases on the covenantee's death.

A personal covenant may be unlimited in duration,¹⁶ as, for instance, during the friendly relations of the parties.¹⁷ However, the death of the covenantee will determine the covenantor's liability.¹⁸

§ 34. Release or Discharge of Personal Covenants

Liability on a personal covenant can be released only by the covenantee, who, as a general rule, cannot take advantage of a breach induced by his own act or agreement. A personal covenant may also be discharged by an act of law rendering performance impossible.

Liability on a personal covenant can be released or discharged only by the covenantee,¹⁹ and at common law this could be done, before breach, only by an instrument under seal;²⁰ but, as is shown in Accord and Satisfaction § 8 a (2), after breach of covenant has occurred, an accord executed may be pleaded in discharge, although the acceptance of a part performance after breach has been held not to release the covenantee's right of action.²¹

It is now generally held, however, that, whenever the breach complained of has been superinduced by the action or agreement of the covenantee, and the matter is properly availed of in defense, he will not be allowed to take advantage of the technical breach thus produced,²² although the covenantor will not thereby be relieved of his obligation to perform such part of the covenant as the covenantee's act has not rendered impossible of performance.²³

A personal covenant may also be discharged by an act of law which renders its performance impossible.²⁴ An assignment by the covenantor does not, without the covenantee's consent, release the former from his obligation.²⁵

§ 35. Persons Entitled to Enforce Personal Covenants

One not a party to a personal covenant ordinarily may not maintain an action thereon, and at common law a personal covenant may not be enforced by anyone other than the covenantee and his personal representative.

An action on a personal covenant will not, as a general rule, lie in favor of a person not a party to it,²⁶ even though the covenant was made for his benefit.²⁷ On the other hand, the general rule has been held not to apply where the third party is brought in privity with the promisor;²⁸ and it has been held that the purchaser at a foreclosure sale may enforce the covenants contained in the deed of trust under which he purchased.²⁹

By the common-law rule an action on a covenant may be brought only by the covenantee,³⁰ or by Bemis Realty Co., 183 N.Y.S. 886, 111 Misc. 635.

Existence of privity

Privity has been held not to exist, under a personal covenant creating an easement for light, between the grantee's remote successors in title and the grantor's tenant under a ninety-nine year lease.—Heimborge v. State Guaranty Corporation, 2 P. 2d 998, 116 Cal.App. 380.

his personal representative,³¹ and an assignee of the covenantee could not maintain an action of covenant.³² Covenants of title which are broken, if at all, as soon as made, and which are, therefore, regarded as mere choses in action, not assignable, and not running with the land, see §§ 63-68, must be sued on by the covenantee or his legal representative.³³ Thus, where a covenant of seizin is regarded as a personal covenant, see supra § 22, an action for breach thereof may not be brought by an assignee of the land,³⁴ although, as will also be noted infra § 63, this rule is limited by some authorities to cases in which no possession accompanied the deed. So, too, where a covenant in a deed to a portion of the grantor's lands was for the protection of the grantor's remaining lands, a subsequent grantee of one of the lots sold has no such interest as will permit him to intervene in an action involving the enforcement of the covenant;³⁵ and the substitution of the name of a third person as grantee in a deed after its delivery, although it is done by consent of both grantor and grantee, will not enable such substituted grantee to maintain an action on a covenant of seizin contained in the deed.³⁶

However, where the cause of action on the covenant broken is assignable, as it is frequently the case by reason of statute, see Assignments § 31, the assignee may sue,³⁷ and, furthermore, the assignee may sue where the statute expressly permits suit against the original grantor.³⁸

§ 36. Persons Liable on Personal Covenants

Generally, only the covenantor and his personal representatives are bound on a personal covenant; an assignee may be liable in equity, but, in the absence of agreement, he is not liable at law.

A person is not liable on a covenant which he has not signed.³⁹ As a general rule, only the covenantor and his personal representatives are bound on a personal covenant.⁴⁰ Thus covenants made by an executor do not bind devisees.⁴¹ Furthermore, one is not bound by covenants in a deed made by a cotenant or a coparcener holding the record title;⁴² and, without acceptance by remaindermen, they are not bound by covenants in a deed of settlement between the life tenants.⁴³ Heirs are bound only when expressly named.⁴⁴

In the absence of agreement, assignees are not liable at law on the covenants of their assignor,⁴⁵ but they may be held liable in equity⁴⁶ where they have taken with notice of the covenant.⁴⁷ Not every personal covenant, however, is enforceable in equity against the covenantor's grantee,⁴⁸ but only those of such a character that a court of equity can make an efficient decree and enforce it when made.⁴⁹

B. COVENANTS OF TITLE

§ 37. In General

In the absence of covenants of title in general, the grantee in the conveyance assumes all risks as to title, and, if it fails, he has no remedy either at law or in equity against the grantor.

Covenants of title are not in general implied, in the absence of statutory regulation, as shown supra § 9, and do not apply to land not included in the deed.⁵⁰ In the absence of fraud or mistake, if a deed contains no covenants of title, all questions of title are at the risk of the grantee,⁵¹ so that, if the title fails, he is without remedy, either at law or in equity, against the grantor;⁵² in such case, a question as to good or bad title is irrelevant.⁵³

The general warranty of title contained in ancient deeds has long been supplanted in the United States by a set of covenants,⁵⁴ and, subject to variations arising from local usage in the different states, and even in different parts of the same state, it may be stated broadly, that in the United States the usual covenants of title are the covenants of seizin, or right to convey, against encumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, and of warranty,⁵⁵ and there is sometimes included in the enumeration a covenant for further assurance.⁵⁶ It has been stated that, in lieu of the covenant of warranty, the usual covenant in England is a covenant for further assurance.⁵⁷ In some jurisdictions, there is in use a covenant of nonclaim,⁵⁸ which has usually been regarded as amounting to the ordinary covenant of warranty and as operating equally by way of estoppel.⁵⁹ Various of these covenants are considered in certain aspects separately and in detail, infra §§ 40-49.

The general rule is that covenants of title in praesenti, if broken, are broken when made,⁶⁰ or, as more specifically stated, when the deed is delivered,⁶¹ as, for example, the covenant of seizin, considered infra § 40, the covenant of right to convey, considered infra § 41, and the covenant against encumbrances, considered infra § 42.

It has been stated broadly that a grantee who has paid for the real property and has received the grantor's covenant of title occupies, as between himself and the grantor, the position of surety, to the extent of the real property, for any existing obligation of the grantor against the real property.⁶²

Estoppel to assert that covenant is personal

In action in equity on covenant to protect and save harmless grantor from assessments for street opening, the purchaser from the grantee which assumed obligation of covenant would be estopped to assert

§ 38. Knowledge of Defects of Title

The fact that either or both of the parties to a conveyance knew of a defect in the grantor's title, or of his want of title, does not necessarily defeat the right of the grantee to claim the benefit of a covenant.

As a general rule, the fact that the grantee or covenantee,⁶³ or the grantor or covenantor,⁶⁴ or both,⁶⁵ knew, at the time of the conveyance, that the grantor's title was defective or that the grantor had no title in a part or in the whole of the land does not affect the right of recovery for a breach of covenant. Such knowledge may be considered, however, in determining whether it was intended that the covenant should extend to such defect.⁶⁶ It has been held or recognized that the general rule does not apply where it appears that a grantee purchases at his own peril and risk,⁶⁷ as when an estate is conveyed by a deed describing it so that the parties must understand therefrom that the estate is subservient to a superior title, which cannot be extinguished nor acquired,⁶⁸ or, as in the case of a covenant of general warranty in a deed from an heir to a coheir of all his interest in the estate of their common ancestor.⁶⁹ Furthermore, the general rule does not apply, it seems, where a subsequent grantee seeks

Actual or constructive notice

(1) Neither actual nor constructive notice has an effect on the rights of the grantor or grantee as between themselves.—City of New York v. New York & South Brooklyn Ferry & Steam Transp. Co., 131 N.E. 554, 231 N.Y. 18, 16 A.L.R. 1059, reversing 179 N.Y.S. 914, 190 App.Div. 939, and reargument denied 132 N.E. 903, 231 N.Y. 598.—Hertzog v. Marx, 94 N.E. 1062, 202 N.Y. 1, 35 L.R.A., N.S., 976.

(2) Doctrine of constructive notice by record does not apply against grantee in action against immediate grantor for breach of covenant, failure of grantee to examine records being immaterial.—Bossieux v. Shapiro, 153 S.E. 667, 154 Va. 255.

(3) Where a grantee protects himself by express covenants, he is not required to go further, even though the means by which he could have fully informed himself as to title are at hand.—Brown v. Carr, 23 Ohio N.P., N.S., 361.

(4) Fact that prior deed of minerals was of record was immaterial.—Foxwell v. Justice, 231 S.W. 509, 191 Ky. 749.

(5) The Registry Laws being intended to provide notice to third persons, and having no application to the parties, a purchaser was not under obligation to search the records to ascertain whether his vendor had sold standing timber which was not reserved.—Young v. Sartor, 95 So. 223, 152 La. 1064.

(6) One acquiring land by a deed calling for a clear title does not acquire subject to a recorded sale of standing timber so as to prevent the grantee claiming the benefit of the grantor's warranty.—Woollums v. Hewitt, 77 So. 295, 142 La. 597.

Warranties in general

(1) Warranties cover defects within legal effect of such covenants, whether known to grantee or unknown.—Lost Creek Coal & Mineral Land Co. v. Hendon, 110 So. 308, 215 Ala. 212.

(2) Under Civ.Code 1910 §§ 4194, 4195, a general warranty of title against the claims of all persons covers defects in the title, although known to the purchaser at the time.—Peters v. Miller, 114 S.E. 640, 154 Ga. 500.

Claim of third person

Knowledge on the part of the grantee or purchaser that a third person was claiming rights in the real property involved does not constitute a defense, nor estop the grantee or purchaser from relying on the covenant.—Jones v. Hodgkins, 26 S.W.2d 19, 233 Ky. 491.—Dotson v. Blankenship, 6 S.W.2d 1073, 224 Ky. 638.

Purchaser of certificate of sale on foreclosure

That plaintiff knew of a defect in the title when he purchased a foreclosure certificate, giving him a right of action against a prior grantor for breach of covenant of seisin as a part of the mortgage security, did not deprive him of the right to recover.—Knapp v. Foley, 168 N.W. 183, 140 Minn. 423.

Removal of buildings by lessee

Grantee was not precluded from recovering from grantor for breach of warranty resulting from lessee's removal of houses by fact that grantee had notice of contract giving lessee right to remove houses.—Curran v. Milhollin, 185 S.E. 380, 53 Ga.App. 270—15 C.J. p 1230 note 96 [a] (1).

Defense to action on purchase-money notes

Notes given for the purchase price of land were unenforceable as against a defense of breach of covenant, in that the vendor and grantor did not have title, even though both parties knew of the defect in the title.—Herron v. Harbour, 182 P. 243, 75 Okl. 127, 29 A.L.R. 906.

to recover on a warranty in a deed made by a remote grantor with full knowledge of the fact that the conveyance was not intended to pass the title but was only a mortgage,⁷⁰ or where a former owner with full knowledge of the condition of the premises seeks to recover on a warranty contained in a reconveyance to him from a subsequent owner.⁷¹

Lack of knowledge by covenantor. An individual who makes a deed containing covenants of clear title must make the title good even though he had no knowledge of defects in title when the deed was executed.⁷²

§ 39. Knowledge of Encumbrances

As a general rule, mere knowledge on the part of the covenantor or grantee of the existence of an encumbrance on the real property involved will not of itself prevent his claiming the benefit of a covenant against or including encumbrances.

Mere knowledge on the part of the purchaser, grantee, or covenantor, of the existence of an encumbrance on the land will not prevent him from recovering for breach of a covenant against or including encumbrances,⁷³ and this rule has been held to apply with reference to a lien for paving taxes,⁷⁴ or to the existence of an outstanding lease.⁷⁵ Although it has been held or recognized that an agreement or covenant to deliver possession, or of right of possession, is not breached where the covenantor or grantee has knowledge of the lease.⁷⁶ It has been held or recognized that the general rule above stated does not apply where, in addition to the purchaser's knowledge of the encumbrance, there is something in the transaction of sale showing that the parties did not intend that it should be within the covenant.⁷⁷

In some jurisdictions, the general rule is that a covenant which ordinarily may be breached by the existence of an encumbrance applies to an outstanding easement, notwithstanding the covenantor had knowledge of the easement.⁷⁸ In cer-

Knowledge of outstanding term and acceptance of rent

An action for breach of covenant against encumbrances may be maintained, where there is an outstanding term on lands conveyed, although its existence is known to the grantee at the time of the execution and the delivery of the deed, and acceptance of rent by the grantee from the lessee does not waive breach of the covenant, not being in disaffirmance of the covenant, but operating to reduce damages.—Klipfel v. Borngesser, 188 N.W. 654, 177 Wis. 423.

Estoppel

Affirmative defense that plaintiff knew of oral leases, and agreed to accept tenants, was insufficient to constitute estoppel to claim damages for breach of covenant against encumbrances.—Western Grain Co. v. Beaver Land-Stock Co., 253 P. 539, 120 Or. 678.

Right of possession

Occupancy by a tenant, where the fact and title of the tenant are known to the grantee at the time property was conveyed, is not a breach of the covenant of right of possession, and, in the absence of a special contract with reference thereto, the occupant becomes tenant to the grantee.—Lindley v. Dakin, 13 Ind. 388.

Deed not accepted subject to lease

Right of grantee to claim the benefit of a covenant of general warranty in respect of outstanding oil and gas lease was not defeated by fact that grantee, at the time of conveyance, had knowledge of oil and gas derricks on the land, in view of special finding by the jury that grantee did not accept deed with knowledge that there was an outstanding lease, which finding was consistent with the general verdict.—Krein v. Steigerwald, 193 A. 390, 123 Pa.Super. 51.

tain jurisdictions, the rule apparently applies to all types of easements,⁷⁹ including public roads or highways over the land conveyed,⁸⁰ but in other jurisdictions in which this general rule is recognized, such road or highway is not within the covenant.⁸¹ In some cases, the view has been taken that such a covenant does not in general apply to open and notorious easements which affect only the condition of the property,⁸² for the reason that

Assurance that easement had expired or been abandoned

The right of a grantee to the benefit of the covenant has been recognized where, although he had noticed some indications of an easement and a deed reserving an easement was recorded, he had received assurances that the easement had expired or had been abandoned.—*Fagan v. In Idaho

(1) In a case in which a private right of way was involved, cases supporting the general rule stated in the text have been cited with apparent approval, but it was noted that the general rule was modified to some extent by the case of Schurger v. Moorman, 117 P. 122, 20 Idaho 97, 36 L.R.A.,N.S., 313, Ann. Cas.1912D 1114.

(2) As to an easement and right of way for an irrigation canal, however, the view was taken that a purchaser of the land was chargeable with notice of the existence of the canal, and that the existence of the easement and servitude was not a breach of the covenant against encumbrances.—Schurger v. Moorman, supra.

In New York

(1) The rule stated in the text has been recognized.—City of New York v. New York & South Brooklyn Ferry & Steam Transp. Co., 131 N.E. 554, 231 N.Y. 18, 16 A.L.R. 1059, reversing 179 N.Y.S. 914, 190 App.Div. 939, and reargument denied 132 N.E. 903, 231 N.Y. 598—15 C.J. p 1232 note 12.

Compare In re Whitlock, 32 Barb. 48.

(2) Rule applies to a private right of way.—Eller v. Moore, 63 N.Y.S. 83, 48 App.Div. 408.

(3) It has been held that, notwithstanding a grantee was aware that a railroad was located on a portion of the premises involved, he could rely on a covenant in the deed to him that, if the grantor did not give good title and possession to the whole or any part of the premises, and of and to the privileges set forth, the grantee could reconvey and receive back the purchase money.—Pryor v. City of Buffalo, 90 N.E. 423, 197 N.Y. 123, affirming 118 N.Y.S. 1136, 134 App.Div. 911, modifying 113 N.Y.S. 249, 61 Misc. 162.

(4) But it has been held that a grantee could not recover in an action for breach of a covenant of quiet possession in view of the presumption that he purchased with knowledge of the facts, where his action was based on the fact that he could not build on a certain part of the land because of a statutory restriction.—Neeson v. Bray, 19 N.Y.S. 841.

In Maine

Where land conveyed is bounded by the center of a public road, and is so described in the deed, the grantee accepts the land cum onere, and may not complain of the encumbrance as a breach of the covenants in his deed.—Holmes v. Danforth, 21 A. 845, 83 Me. 139.

In New York

(1) It seems that a public highway and the lawful structures thereon constitute an exception to the general rule.—Callanan v. Keenan, 121 N.E. 376, 224 N.Y. 503, reversing 166 N.Y.S. 71, 179 App.Div. 405, rehearing denied 122 N.E. 877, 225 N.Y. 662—Pryor v. City of Buffalo, 90 N.E. 423, 177 N.Y. 123, affirming 118

N.Y.S. 1136, 134 App.Div. 911, modifying 113 N.Y.S. 249, 61 Misc. 162.

(2) A grantee who took his deed knowing that an elevated railroad was in operation in the street on which the lot abutted, took with notice that the railroad company had some claim of right to the easements in the street, and he could not recover from his grantor on the ground that such railroad was an encumbrance, within a covenant against encumbrances.—Bacharach v. Von Eiff, 26 N.Y.S. 842, 74 Hun 533.

In Washington

(1) It has been stated broadly that a public highway is impliedly exempted from the effect of a covenant against encumbrances.—Hoyt v. Rothe, 163 P. 925, 95 Wash. 369.

(2) This rule is, however, confined to rural property and does not apply to city property.—Bank of Alaska v. Ashland, 224 P. 7, 128 Wash. 572.

Private or public easement

In some jurisdictions, an easement obviously and notoriously affecting the physical condition of land at the time of its sale is not embraced in a general covenant against encumbrances, whether it is a private or public easement.—Chandler v. Gault, 194 N.W. 33, 181 Wis. 5—15 C.J. p 1232 note 13.

Railroad right of way has been regarded in some cases as within the rule stated in the text.—Van Ness v. Royal Phosphate Co., 53 So. 381, 382, 60 Fla. 284, 30 L.R.A.,N.S., 833, Ann.Cas.1912C 647—15 C.J. p 1277 note 7.

Telephone line

The presence of a transformer and telephone line on land sold was not such an encumbrance as constituted a defect in vender's title, entitling the purchaser to sue for breach of covenants of seisin and against encumbrances, the presence thereof being sufficient to charge the purchaser with full knowledge of the character and nature of the easement, which was open, obvious, and notorious.—Chandler v. Gault, 194 N.W. 33, 181 Wis. 5.

In Georgia

In a case in which the court declined to express an opinion as to whether a private road would be a

the purchaser or grantee is presumed to have contracted with reference thereto.⁸³

Lack of knowledge by covenantor. An individual who makes a deed containing covenants of clear title must make the title good even though he had no knowledge of an existing encumbrance when the deed was executed,⁸⁴ and a general warranty of title is a warranty of title as against a lien which has attached at the time the deed is given, notwithstanding the grantor at the time of execution of the deed had no knowledge of the existence of the lien.⁸⁵ breach of a covenant of warranty against encumbrances, it was held that the existence of a public road on land, of which the grantee had knowledge at the time of his purchase, was not a breach of such covenant.—Desvergers v. Willis, 56 Ga. 515, 21 Am.R. 289.

In Kentucky

(1) The rule stated in the text has been recognized in respect of a railroad right of way, on the ground that it must be presumed that the price was fixed with reference to the actual condition of the land.—Patterson v. Jones, 32 S.W.2d 408, 235 Ky. 838.—Bird v. Bank of Williams-town, 13 S.W. 430, 11 Ky.L. 368.

(2) A like rule applies in respect of a public highway.—Butte v. Riffe, 98 Ky. 352.

(3) It seems that the rule is different as to a private way.—Helton v. Asher, 123 S.W. 285, 135 Ky. 751.

In Pennsylvania

(1) The rule stated in the text has been recognized or applied.—Memmert v. McKee, 4 A. 542, 112 Pa. 315—15 C.J. p 1232 note 13, p 1276 note 99 [a]. (3).

(2) A private right of way may be within the covenant if the land was not plainly and openly subject to the easement.—Eby v. Elder, 15 A. 423, 122 Pa. 342.

(3) A private way of which the grantee had only constructive notice was held to be within the covenant involved.—Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229.

(4) A distinction has been made between an implied covenant against encumbrances and an express and positive covenant against encumbrances in recognizing that the latter would be operative and effective in the case of an existing railroad right of way, notwithstanding the purchaser's knowledge.—Strong v. Brinton, 63 Pa.Super. 267.

In Tennessee

(1) In a comparatively recent case in the court of appeals, the view was taken, in respect of a joint driveway located on lands of adjoining owners, that, in view of the facts that the driveway was open, visible, obvious, and notorious, and that the parties to the conveyance contracted with reference to it, it could not be considered an encumbrance within the meaning of the covenant against encumbrances.—Jones v. Whitaker, 12 Tenn.App. 551.

(2) In an earlier case in the former court of chancery appeals, it was pointed out that the grantee's knowledge of a passageway across the land at the time of purchase would not necessarily show that he knew of the right of a third person to use it, and it was held that, in view of the finding of the jury showing that the covenantee did not know of the legal existence of the easement, there was a breach of covenant.—*Perry v. Title in fee

(1) Covenant of title in fee simple is covenant of seisin.—Whatcom Timber Co. v. Wright, 173 P. 724, 102 Wash. 566.—Potwin v. Blasher, 37 P. 710, 9 Wash. 460.

(2) Covenant that grantor was lawfully seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple, etc., in accordance with Remington Code § 8747 subd 1, Remington Rev.St. § 10552 subd 1, is a covenant of seisin.—Brown v. Carpenter, 169 P. 331, 99 Wash. 227.

Indefeasible estate in fee simple

The rule stated in the text has been recognized in respect of a covenant of seisin of an indefeasible

§ 40. Covenant of Seizin

While, according to some cases, an indefeasible title is not necessary in order to support the covenant of seisin, the covenant is now usually regarded as a covenant of title, involving an assurance that the covenantor has the estate which he purports to convey. It is usually regarded as a covenant in presenti.

A covenant of seisin is now generally regarded as a covenant of title,⁸⁶ and has been defined to be an assurance that the grantor has the very estate in quantity and quality which he purports to convey.⁸⁷ In some cases, however, it has been held that it is not necessary that the covenantor should have a seisin under an indefeasible title,⁸⁸ but that estate in fee simple.—Frazer v. Peoria County, 74 Ill. 282—Clapp v. Hardman, 25 Ill.App. 509.

Statute

Under Real Property Law § 253, covenant of seisin means that grantor at time of conveyance was lawfully seized of good, absolute, and indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple, and had power to convey, and possession will not satisfy covenant.—Hilliker v. Rueger, 126 N.E. 266, 228 N.Y. 11, modifying 170 N.Y.S. 1086, 184 App.Div. 907.

Primary and secondary meaning

Covenant of seisin implies that at the time the deed is delivered "the covenantor then had, not only the possession, but the right of possession and the right of property. This is the primary meaning of seisin; its secondary meaning is possession alone."—Pridgen v. Long, 98 S.E. 451, 454, 177 N.C. 189.

In Nebraska

(1) The rule stated in the text has been recognized.—Real v. Hollister, 29 N.W. 189, 20 Neb. 112.

(2) In an earlier case, the view was expressed that if the grantor was in exclusive possession under claim of title, even if adverse to the owner, the covenant was not broken until the purchaser or those claiming under him were evicted by title paramount.—Scott v. Twiss, 4 Neb. 133.

In Indiana

(1) Good title in fee simple is not, under all circumstances, necessary to support a covenant of seisin, a seizin in fact is sufficient,⁸⁹ whether the covenantor gained it by his own disseizin or under a disseizin.⁹⁰

The authorities agree that an indefeasible seizin is required where the covenant expressly provides that the seizin is of such an estate,⁹¹ or where use of particular words specified by statute amounts to a covenant that the grantor is seized of an indefeasible estate in fee simple.⁹² The view has been taken, however, that a covenant of seizin extends only to title existing in a third person and not to one existing in the covenantee, as shown infra § 96.

The covenant is usually referred to as a personal covenant, as shown supra § 22. The general rule is that it is a covenant in praesenti and that, if broken, it is broken as soon as it is made,⁹³ or, more specifically, when the deed or conveyance is delivered.⁹⁴ In some jurisdictions, however, the view has been taken that the covenant is not broken when made where the grantor was in actual possession at the time of conveyance and the grantee entered under the deed.⁹⁵ These rules should be considered in connection with the detailed discussions as to whether the covenant of seizin runs with the lands, infra § 63, as to performance or breach of such covenant, infra § 96, as to the time to sue on covenants, infra § 122, and as to damages recoverable, infra § 143.

A covenant of seizin is equivalent to a covenant of right to convey,⁹⁶ but it is not necessarily a cove-and any existing title may be sufficient.—Axtel v. Chase, 77 Ind. 74—15 C.J. p 1234 note 23.

(2) In an action in which the covenant declared on was that defendant grantor was "seized in fee" of the land, it was said that "in an action on the covenant of seizin, it is sufficient to allege, in the direct negative, that the defendant was not seized in fee."—Martin v. Baker, Ind., 5 Blackf. 332, 236.

In Ohio

(1) Actual possession by the grantor at the time the conveyance is made is sufficient to support the covenant until eviction, where the grantee entered under the deed.—Great Western Stock Co. v. Saas, 24 Ohio St. 542—15 C.J. p 1234 note 23.

(2) The definition of the covenant "as an assurance to the purchaser that the grantor has the very estate in quantity and quality which he purports to convey" has, however, been quoted with apparent approval.—Wetzel v. Richcreek, 40 N.E. 1004, 53 Ohio St. 62, 68.

(3) A covenant that the grantors are "the true and lawful owners of said premises and have full power to convey the same" has apparently been regarded as denoting the possession of a fee simple title.—McCarthy v. Hansel, 4 Ohio App. 425.

nant against encumbrances.⁹⁷ The covenant of warranty, considered in detail infra §§ 47-49, has been distinguished from the covenant of seizin on the grounds that the former in general involves disturbance of possession and relates to events subsequent to the making of the covenant, whereas the covenant of seizin in general goes to the title only, does not refer to possession, and is broken, if at all, when the covenant is made;⁹⁸ and like distinctions between the covenant of seizin and the covenant for quiet enjoyment, considered in detail infra § 45, have been recognized.⁹⁹ Furthermore, the covenant of seizin differs from the covenant of warranty in that a covenant of seizin does not in general prevent the grantor from setting up an after-acquired title in himself.¹

While, according to some cases, the covenant of good right to convey implies only actual seizin and possession, it has been regarded as a covenant relating to title. It is usually regarded as a covenant in praesenti.

The covenant of good right to convey, which has been regarded as synonymous with, or equivalent to, the covenant of seizin, as shown supra § 40, according to some cases, relates to the title,² importing only that the grantor had a right to convey.³

It has been said that the covenant is a guaranty against any title existing in a third person which might defeat the estate granted.⁴ If, however, the doctrine of actual seizin, considered supra §

40, controls, the covenant of good right to convey implies only actual seizin and possession.⁵

In English deeds there is sometimes inserted a covenant that the grantor has good right to convey an indefeasible estate in fee; but it has been stated that this covenant is seldom introduced in our deeds of conveyance, and the view has been taken that, on the construction of covenants against encumbrances, such covenant is unnecessary.⁶

The covenant has been regarded as a personal covenant, as shown supra § 22. According to the rule usually recognized, it is a covenant in praesenti and, if broken, it is broken as soon as it is made,⁷ or, as more specifically stated, when the deed is delivered.⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the view has been taken that the covenant is not broken when made if the grantor is in actual possession when the conveyance is made and the grantee enters under the deed.⁹ These rules should be considered in connection with the detailed discussions as to whether the covenant of right to convey runs with the land, infra § 64, as to performance and breach, infra § 97, as to the time to sue on covenants, infra § 122, and as to damages recoverable, infra § 144.

The covenant of warranty, considered in detail, infra §§ 47-49, has been distinguished from the covenant of full power to convey on the ground that the former in general involves disturbance of possession and relates to a time subsequent to the making of the covenant, whereas the covenant of full power to convey in general goes to the title only, does not refer to possession, and is broken, if at all, when the covenant is made.¹⁰

§ 42. Covenant against Encumbrances

The covenant against encumbrances in general constitutes security against rights to, or interests in, the real property granted which may subsist in a third person to the diminution in value of the estate granted, although consistent with the passing of the fee. The covenant is in general a covenant in praesenti.

While it has been stated that the word "encumbrance" has no technical legal meaning,¹¹ it is said to be anything which "constitutes a burden upon the title",¹² "a burden or charge,"¹³ "any right existing in another to use the land or whereby the use by the owner is restricted",¹⁴ or any claim which "charges, burdens, obstructs, or impairs its use [of the land], or prevents or impedes its transfer."¹⁵ As now generally recognized by the courts, a covenant against encumbrances is one which has for its object security against those rights to, or interest in, the land granted which may subsist in third persons to the diminution in value of the estate although consistent with the passing of the fee.¹⁶ In general, the covenant extends to adverse claims or liens on the estate conveyed whereby the same may be defeated wholly or in part,¹⁷ whether, according to some cases, the claims or liens are uncertain and contingent or otherwise.¹⁸ These rules should be considered in connection with the detailed discussions as to performance and breach of the covenant, including discussions as to particular charges, claims, or liens, the existence of which will constitute a breach of the covenant, infra §§ 98-107.

Broadly speaking, the covenant is an engagement that the title conveyed is unencumbered;¹⁹ it is not a covenant to defend a suit on an encumbrance.²⁰ Where grantors covenant generally against encumbrances made by them, it may be construed as extending to several as well as joint encumbrances.²¹

Apart from covenants implied under statute, from the use of particular words, considered supra § 13, what will constitute a covenant against encumbrances, as well as its scope, may become a question of construction, to be determined by the intention of the parties as manifested by the deed.²² Some statutes make detailed and mandatory provision as to how a covenant that the premises are free from encumbrances is to be construed.²³

The covenant has been regarded as a personal covenant, as shown supra § 22. According to the rule usually recognized, it is a covenant in praesenti and, if broken, it is broken, as soon as it is made,²⁴ or, as more specifically, stated, when the deed is delivered.²⁵ The breach at the time the covenant is made may, however, be merely technical or nominal,²⁶ and, according to some cases, the covenant is in effect a covenant or contract of indemnity.²⁷ These general rules as to the time of breach and as to the nature of the covenant as one of indemnity should be considered in connection with the detailed discussions as to whether the covenant runs with the land, infra § 65, as to performance or breach, infra §§ 98-107, as to time to sue on covenants, infra § 122, and as to damages recoverable, infra § 145.

The covenant of warranty, considered in detail infra §§ 47-49, has been distinguished from the covenant against incumbrances on the grounds that the former is in general a covenant in futuro and runs with the land, whereas the covenant against incumbrances is a covenant in praesenti, is broken when made, and does not run with the land,²⁸ and that an eviction or its equivalent is in general an element of a breach of a covenant of warranty, but is not an element of a breach of a covenant against encumbrances.²⁹ A like distinction in respect of eviction as an element of breach has been made between the covenant for quiet enjoyment, considered in detail, infra § 45, and the covenant against encumbrances.³⁰

§ 45. Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment

The covenant for quiet enjoyment is an assurance against the effect of a defective title and of any resultant disturbance, subject to such limitations as are contained in the conveyance.

Performance and breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment in general see infra § 108.

While it has been laid down that the covenant for quiet enjoyment goes to the possession and not to the title,³¹ such covenant is an assurance against the consequences of a defective title and of any disturbance thereupon,³² and, broadly and generally speaking, it extends to all lawful outstanding claims on the premises conveyed,³³ subject to the general rule that it applies only to the acts of those claiming under paramount and lawful title existing at the time the covenant was made.³⁴

The covenant has been regarded as an agreement that the grantor will not trouble, molest, evict, nor disturb the grantee,³⁵ and also as a covenant against disturbance by any encumbrancer.³⁶ As sometimes stated, the covenant not only bars the grantor from claiming the estate granted, but also requires him to defend it when assailed by a paramount title.³⁷ Where, however, the party covenants for quiet enjoyment against himself and those claiming under him, he excludes the idea of a covenant against all the world.³⁸ Various applications and qualifications of these rules are considered in connection with the detailed discussion of performance and breach of the covenant, infra § 108.

In general, the covenant operates prospective-ly or in futuro,³⁹ and it is usually held or recognized, subject to certain qualifications or limitations, that the covenant runs with the land as shown infra § 66, and that there is no breach until there has been an eviction or the equivalent, as shown infra § 108.

What will and what will not constitute a covenant for quiet enjoyment is a question dependent on the true intention of the parties, as shown by the whole instrument.⁴⁰

The covenant of warranty, considered in detail infra §§ 47-49, and the covenant for quiet enjoyment are usually regarded as substantially equivalent or identical in operation and effect,⁴¹ and in some jurisdictions this operation and effect is given to the covenants of quiet enjoyment which are implied from the use of particular words.⁴² Some cases have, however, noted distinctions between these covenants,⁴³ in stating or intimating that the covenant for quiet enjoyment is one to defend the possession merely, while the covenant of warranty is in addition an undertaking to defend the land and the estate in it,⁴⁴ and that, in the case of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, the eviction is merely required to be of lawful right, while in the covenant of warranty the eviction must not only be of lawful right but by paramount title.⁴⁵

A covenant for further assurance has been distinguished from a covenant for quiet enjoyment.⁴⁶

§ 46. Covenant for Further Assurance

The covenant for further assurance relates both to the title of the grantor and to the instrument of conveyance, and in general requires those bound by the covenant to make such further assurances as those entitled to the benefit of the covenant may lawfully and reasonably require.

The covenant for further assurance relates both to the title of the vendor and to the instrument of conveyance to the purchaser,⁴⁷ and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts necessary for supplying any defects in the former as to remove all objections to the sufficiency of the latter.⁴⁸ The effect of the covenant is that the grantor binds himself and his heirs to make all such further assurances of the land as shall lawfully and reasonably be required by the grantee or his heirs.⁴⁹ The covenant applies only to the estate and interest granted, as shown supra § 31, which estate cannot be enlarged by the covenant.⁵⁰ It is intended by the covenant, however, to give full effect and operation to the estate and interest conveyed by the deed.⁵¹ In some jurisdictions, the statutory covenant for further assurance, implied from the use of certain words, relates only to such defects as the grantor can supply.⁵²

The covenant is prospective in operation,⁵³ and runs with the land, as shown infra § 67.

No technical words are necessary to create the covenant.⁵⁴

A covenant that, if the grantors obtain title from the United States, they will convey the same to the grantees by deed of general warranty, is a covenant for further assurance,⁵⁵ entitling the grantees to a conveyance of the legal title when the contingency happens, as shown infra § 109. There is authority for the view that a quitclaim deed with covenants of further assurance operates to convey to the grantee an after acquired title to the premises obtained by the grantor from a state or from the United States.⁵⁶

The covenant of a son for further assurance in respect of property which he expected to receive from his father on the latter's death has been regarded as valid where there was adequate consideration, the transaction was bona fide, and the father consented.⁵⁷

The covenant of warranty, considered in detail infra §§ 47-49, has been distinguished from the covenant for further assurance.⁵⁸

Questions as to performance or breach of the covenant for further assurance are considered in various aspects and in detail, infra § 109.

§ 47. Covenant of Warranty

A covenant of warranty is an undertaking or contract to compensate the grantee in money if title fails, or, in general, to protect against adverse and lawful claims and demands.

A covenant of warranty in a deed has been defined as an undertaking to compensate the grantee in money if the title fails,⁵⁹ a contract by which the grantor of land undertakes to protect the land from all lawful claims and demands existing at the time of the grant,⁶⁰ and as a covenant to defend,

46. Proceedings to enforce, or to determine, rights

"An essential difference between the covenant for further assurance and the covenants of quiet enjoyment and warranty is that, on breach of the latter, the validity of the adverse claim must be determined by proceedings taken by the adverse claimant against the grantee, or by what is equivalent thereto, while, on a bill for specific performance of the covenant for further assurance, the validity of the claim is determined in a suit between the grantee and grantor, to which the claimant is not a party, and by which he is not bound."—*Zabriskie v. not the possession merely, but the land and the estate in it.⁶¹ It is an assurance that the grantee and his heirs and assigns shall not be deprived of the possession by force of paramount title.⁶² Generally speaking, this covenant includes only such claims and suits as have a legal foundation,⁶³ and does not include adverse claims or suits, without legal foundation, for which the covenantor is not responsible.⁶⁴ In general, the grantee under a warranty deed is entitled to the immediate possession of the property conveyed.⁶⁵ Various applications and limitations of these rules are considered in the detailed discussion of performance and breach of the covenant, infra §§ 110-112.

A covenant of warranty is not considered a debt until the covenant is broken.⁶⁶

The general rule is that this covenant operates prospectively or in futuro,⁶⁷ and it is usually held or recognized, subject to certain qualifications, that the covenant runs with the land, as shown infra § 68, and that there is no breach until there has been an eviction or the equivalent, as shown infra § 112.

It seems that the old common-law warranty was usually regarded as essentially real, as shown supra § 22, and as applicable to estates of freehold.⁶⁸ The covenant of warranty now in use, however, has been regarded or characterized in some cases as a personal covenant, as explained supra § 22. In some jurisdictions, express warranties are given the same effect as implied warranties at common law.⁶⁹

No technical words are indispensable to a covenant of warranty,⁷⁰ but any language evidencing the intention of the parties is sufficient.⁷¹

Subject to certain limitations or qualifications, a covenant of warranty is in effect substantially the same as a covenant for quiet enjoyment, as shown supra § 45. It has been held or recognized that, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, various usual covenants, at least those other than the covenant for quiet enjoyment, are not embraced in a covenant of warranty,⁷² but in some jurisdictions covenants of warranty are held to embrace all the usual common-law covenants,⁷³ and various of the usual covenants are sometimes included by virtue of statute.⁷⁴

Right to relief or restitution

What law governs

It has been held that a statutory provision for reading various covenants into a statutory form of warranty deed was effective only as to the conveyance of real estate situated in the state by which the statute was enacted and could not affect real property in another state; in a state in which such statute exists, the court cannot read covenants into a conveyance of lands in another state, containing a general warranty, unless provision therefor is made by a law, of such other state, and, in the absence of any such law, the courts of the forum may at most give such effect to the conveyance as would be given to it at common law.—Alcorn v. Epler, 206 Ill.App. 140.

In Mississippi

(1) Under statute, the word "warrant," within warranty deed, embraces all five covenants of warranty known to common law, including seisin, power to sell, freedom from encumbrance, quiet enjoyment, and warranty of title.

Ky.—Dortch's Ex'r v. Willoughby,

§ 48. — General Warranty

A covenant of general warranty relates to the title and to the right, interest, or estate granted.

The covenant of general warranty has been characterized as the broadest and most effective covenant.⁷⁵ While questions as to possession or interference with possession may be involved, as appears from the detailed discussion as to eviction in connection with breach of the covenant, infra § 112, a covenant of general warranty relates to the title,⁷⁶ and, as a general rule, only to the title as it existed at the time the conveyance was made,⁷⁷ although an exception to the rule has been recognized where the subsequent but prevailing title is created by the act of the covenantor,⁷⁸ as more fully appears in the discussion of performance and breach of the covenant, infra § 110. While, under some circumstances, the warranty may, in connection with the description of the land conveyed, refer to and include the quantity or area,⁷⁹ usually the covenant does not warrant nor guarantee the quantity of land.⁸⁰ Questions as to the creation by description of premises of implied covenant in respect of the quantity of land are considered supra § 16.

The covenant does not pass any estate,⁸¹ nor does it enlarge⁸² nor restrict⁸³ the estate conveyed; but it may be a circumstance to be considered in determining the estate which it was intended to grant.⁸⁴

The covenant extends to the right, interest, or estate granted.⁸⁵ Where the deed duly construed purports to convey the fee, it has been held that a covenant to warrant and defend the premises against the lawful claims and demands of all persons is a warranty of title.⁸⁶ The covenant does

(1) Easement appurtenant was included in covenant.—Weaver v. Propst, Tex.Civ.App., 28 S.W.2d 872, error refused.

(2) Water rights not appurtenant to the land were not within the general covenant.—George v. Robison, 63 P. 819, 23 Utah 79.

Timber

Warranty in deed of land did not apply to timber unless it was part of the realty and was intended to be conveyed.—Cheatham v. Head, 262 S.W. 622, 203 Ky. 489.

General warranty not reduced to special warranty

Where a certain parcel of land was included in the description of the land conveyed, the character of the covenant was not changed from one of general warranty to one of special warranty by a recital added to the description in view of the fact that such recital did not necessarily limit the description.—Dotson v. Blankenship, 6 S.W.2d 1073, 224 Ky. 638.

Extent of liability

A grantor's liability as warrantor extends to failure of title to land which, by its terms, the deed purports to convey.—Peavy-Moore Lumber Co. v. Duhig, Tex.Civ.App., 119 S.W.2d 688, error granted.

86. "Undivided interest" and "premises"

A deed purporting to grant, bargain, and sell "the following described real estate . . . to wit: All our undivided interest," and contain-not extend to land included by mistake,⁸⁷ nor embrace land not described in the deed.⁸⁸ Questions as to the limitation of a covenant of general warranty to the estate conveyed are considered in various aspects supra § 31.

While covenants of seizin, of good right to convey, of freedom from encumbrances, and to warrant and defend against the lawful claims of all persons are sometimes referred to as covenants of general warranty,⁸⁹ yet, subject to certain statutory modifications,⁹⁰ the obligation in a general warranty of title is not, in general that the covenantor is the true owner,⁹¹ or that he is seized in fee, with the right to convey,⁹² but that he will defend and protect the covenantee against the rightful claims of all persons thereafter asserted,⁹³ under title paramount to that conveyed.⁹⁴ It has been stated broadly that the covenant is to the effect that the grantor has not conveyed the same estate or any right, title, or interest therein to any person other than the grantee and that the property conveyed is free from encumbrances.⁹⁵ It implies that the grantor has not done any act nor created any encumbrance by which the estate granted by him could be defeated;⁹⁶ and unless it is otherwise provided, it has the effect of warranting against claims and judgments outstanding against the grantor but is not a warranty against claims and judgments outstanding against the grantee.⁹⁷ The covenant includes a warranty against the state,⁹⁸ and the United States.⁹⁹

Where a grantor conveys with "warranty" only, the covenant will be regarded as a "general warranty."¹

In Louisiana, in determining the extent of the warranty or the obligation of the vendor of immovable property, where the transfer is made with a stipulation of general warranty, the act of sale alone is to be considered and construed with the law declaring the effect of a general warranty, in the absence of allegations and proof of error.²

The rules stated in this section should be considered in connection with the discussion of performance and breach of the covenant infra §§ 110-112.

§ 49. — Special Warranty

A covenant of warranty is special when it is limited or restricted, in its operation, to certain persons or claims.

A covenant of warranty is special when it applies only to certain persons or claims to which its operation is limited or restricted.³ Covenants of

ing the covenant described in the text, was construed as purporting to convey the fee, and the deed contained a covenant of title applicable to the fee and to the claims of third persons; the word "premises," as used in the covenant, meant "only the property, the land, described in the deed, whether the quantum of interest be the entire fee or an undivided interest therein."—*Coston v. Barring covenantor and heirs and undertaking to defend Covenants of warranty constitute an engagement or covenant that the covenantor and his heirs shall be barred from ever claiming the estate, and that he and they shall undertake to defend it when assailed by a paramount title.—Biwer v. Martin, 128 N.E. 518, 294 Ill. 488.

Not guaranty of perfect title

"Special warranty deed"

It has been stated broadly that a "special warranty deed" simply warrants title against all defects there-

special warranty have been expressed in various forms.⁴

A warranty against all persons, or the claims of all persons, claiming by, through, or under the grantor cannot be extended to a general covenant of warranty against all persons.⁵ It has been held or recognized that a covenant of this type refers in general only to the existing title or interest granted,⁶ and, consequently, does not bar the covenantor from claiming the same premises against his own covenantee, or grantee by title acquired subsequent to the making of his own deed.⁷ While there is authority for the view that a covenant of special warranty does not cover a lien for taxes arising while the grantor was the owner, because of his failure to pay such taxes, where the grant was of his right, title, and interest,⁸ it has been held or recognized that a covenant of special warranty may extend to acts of, or claims created by, the grantor while he was the owner of the property.⁹

The rules here stated should be considered in connection with the discussion of performance and breach of the covenant of warranty, infra §§ 110-112.

Various forms regarded as special warranty

(1) "Against all persons claiming by, through, or under" the grantor.—Raymond v. Raymond, 10 Cush., Mass. 134—15 C.J. p 1239 note 40.

(2) "Against the lawful claims of all persons claiming by, from, through, or under the grantor."—Fountain Square Theatre Co. v. Pendery, 6 Ohio Cir.Ct., N.S., 78, 17 Ohio Cir.Dec. 285, affirming 3 Ohio N.P., N.S., 41.

(3) "Against the lawful claim of all persons whomsoever, by, through and under" the grantor.—Burton v. Price, 141 So. 728, 105 Fla. 544.

"Holding through or under"

(1) Covenant of warranty "against the lawful claims or demands of all persons, holding through or under us" is made a special covenant by the clause "holding through or under us," the restriction not relating to the nature of the encumbrances covered by the warranty, but to the time and manner in which they accrued.—Dothan Nat. Bank v. Hollis, 103 So. 589, 212 Ala. 628.

(2) "Holding through" the grantor implies a claim or encumbrance created by the act of the grantor, while "holding under" the grantor has a wider meaning.—Dothan Nat. Bank v. Hollis, supra.

(3) Dower and homestead claims of a wife are not covered by the husband's covenant against those claiming "under" him.—McCracken v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 146 S.W. 693.

"Warrant specially"

The words "warrant specially" in a conveyance is merely a covenant that the grantor and his heirs and representatives warrant the title against the claims of all persons claiming through or under the grantor.—Jones v. Metzger, 96 So. 161, 132 Miss. 247.

Special warranty not created

Deed in which grantors covenanted that at delivery they were lawfully seized and possessed of absolute estate in the land, and that it was free and clear from all encumbrances except a named mortgage, and that "they will warrant forever defend the title" to the same, is not a special warranty against the mortgage mentioned.—Holland v. W. C. Belcher Land Mortg. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 248 S. W. 808.

Prior owner

(1) Covenant of special warranty did not protect purchaser against claims of children of vendor's grantor, since special warranty does not protect grantee from claims against such grantor.—Kentucky River Coal Corporation v. Swift Coal & Timber Co., 299 S.W. 201, 221 Ky. 593.

(2) Quitclaim deed warranting title against persons claiming title by, through, or under grantor relieved grantor of warranty against homestead claim of persons from whom the grantor had acquired his interest in the property by a deed of general warranty in form, which was in fact intended as a mortgage.—Hein v. Henry, Tex.Civ.App., 299 S.W. 456.

Paramount title

Where a purchaser accepts a deed of conveyance containing a warranty of title expressly limited to claims under the vendor, the covenant, in effect declares the vendor does not warrant against a title paramount, and nothing short of fraudulent intent of the vendor in representing his title to be good, or concealment where the duty of disclosure exists, can authorize relief for his misrepresentations as to the title.—Hawthorne v. Odenson, 120 A. 797, 94 N. J.Eq. 588.

7. U.S.—Lamb v. Burbank, C.C.Or., 14 F.Cas.No.8,012, 1 Sawy. 227.

8. Ohio.—Fountain Square Theatre Co. v. Pendery, 6 Ohio Cir.Ct., N.S., 78, 17 Ohio Cir.Dec. 285, affirming 3 Ohio N.P., N.S., 41.

9. Statutory regulation

Under Code Pub.Gen.L.1924 art 21 § 76, covenant of special warranty makes it grantor's duty to defend title against claims which he may have created at any prior time; in suit for breach of covenant of special warranty, based on fact that defendants had previously conveyed adjacent land to another under deed containing covenant restricting use of plaintiffs' land, the fact that defendants had parted with and reacquired property sold plaintiffs after making conveyance imposing restriction was not a defense.—Wempe v. Schoentag, 163 A. 868, 163 Md. 647.

Taxes

It has been held that, where a grantor conveys land by special warranty, he is under obligation to pay accrued taxes or to notify the purchaser of proceedings for the foreclosure of a certificate of delinquency.—Collins v. Hoffman, 133 P. 450, 74 Wash. 264.

C. COVENANTS AS TO USE OF REAL PROPERTY

§ 50. In General

Since the validity of covenants or restrictions in conveyances as to the use and improvement of real property together with the construction, operation, and enforcement of such covenants or restrictions are ordinarily questions not depending on the character of the stipulation as being technically in the nature of a covenant, or of a condition, or of a restriction, they are discussed in the C.J.S. title Deeds §§ 162-171, also 18 C.J. p 386 note 16-p 404 note 27. Restrictions in leases as to the use of the premises are discussed in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant § 238, also 35 C.J. p 1185 note 78-p 1187 note 2.

§ 51. Buildings, Structures and Improvements

The construction and operation of covenants or restrictions in deeds as to buildings, structures, and improvements, including the character, height, and location of such buildings, etc., are discussed in the C.J.S. title Deeds §§ 164-166, also 18 C.J. p 386 note 16-p 393 note 7.

§ 52. — Tenement Houses

Covenants or restrictions as to the erection of tenements, flats, or apartment houses on the property conveyed are discussed in the C.J.S. title Deeds § 164, also 18 C.J. p 392 notes 78-80.

§ 53. Nuisances and Particular Occupations

Covenants or stipulations prohibiting the use of property for business, manufacturing, or offensive purposes are discussed in the C.J.S. title Deeds § 165, also 18 C.J. p 393 notes 83-6.

D. COVENANTS RUNNING WITH THE LAND

§ 54. In General

Covenants running with the land are such as so affect the land that their benefits or obligations pass with the ownership. It is ordinarily stated as essential that they affect the land, that they be intended to run with it, and that there be privity of estate or contract between the original parties.

A covenant running with the land is one so relating to the land,¹⁰ or which so "touches and concerns the land" itself,¹¹ that its benefit or obligation passes with the ownership¹² irrespective of the consent of subsequent parties.¹³ Some authorities consider that only real covenants run with the land¹⁴ and such covenants ordinarily do run with the land, whereas personal covenants ordinarily do not so run in the absence of express stipulation, as is stated supra § 22. However, covenants which are by some authorities considered as "personal" have nevertheless been held to run with the land, as in the case of certain covenants of title discussed infra §§ 63-68. A covenant will not run with the land merely because it is part of the consideration expressed in a deed.¹⁵ Parol covenants of themselves do not run with the land.¹⁶

The common-law test of a covenant running with the land requires that its performance or nonperformance must affect the nature, quality, value, or mode of enjoyment of the estate demised to which it must relate.¹⁷ The essentials of such a covenant have been stated to be that the grantor and grantee must have intended that the covenant run with the land; the covenant must affect or concern the land with which it runs; and there must be privity of estate between the party claiming the benefit and the party who rests under the burden.¹⁸ It has been held to make no difference in determining whether a covenant runs with the land whether the method of enforcement is at law or in equity,¹⁹ but under some authority a stipulation not in the form of a technical covenant sealed by the grantee, and for that reason not held a covenant running with the land, will not be enforced at law, although relief may be had in equity.²⁰

Where the intention of the parties is the determining factor, such intent will be ascertained from the facts, as appear from the grant itself and the surrounding circumstances.²¹

Where a statute directs what covenants shall run with the land, covenants other than those specified do not run.²²

Covenants of title. Whereas in England all covenants for title appear to run with the land,²³ the weight of American authority is that covenants in presenti do not run with the land²⁴ and that covenants in futuro do so run,²⁵ but that even the latter cease to run with the land from the time they are broken, as considered infra § 74. The usual covenants in presenti are seizin, right to convey, and against encumbrances, and the usual covenants in futuro are quiet enjoyment, further assurance, and warranty, as discussed supra §§ 40-49. These covenants descend to heirs and vest in assignees,²⁶ although the assignment is by quitclaim deed,²⁷ or bargain and sale deed,²⁸ and cannot pass or be assigned otherwise than with the land to which they are annexed.²⁹

Covenant as to acreage. A covenant in a deed as to acreage does not run with the land.³⁰

Covenants in leases, express or implied, as running with the land are considered in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant § 240, also 35 C.J. p 1187 note 10-p 1189 note 32.

§ 55. What Law Governs

The lex situs generally governs the ascertainment, construction, and effect of covenants running with the land.

Except where the common-law distinction between local and transitory actions no longer exists,³¹ covenants which run with the land are governed by the lex loci rei sitae.³² Such law ordinarily determines whether a particular covenant runs with the land³³ and the construction³⁴ and effect³⁵ of such covenants.

§ 56. Property to Which Annexable

A covenant running with the land ordinarily must relate to the property conveyed; a covenant which is collateral to the land or which relates to personalty usually does not run with the land.

In order that a covenant may run with the land, it must respect the property conveyed,³⁶ and the act covenanted to be done or omitted must concern the land or the estate conveyed.³⁷ However, as is stated infra § 62, there is authority to the effect that the question whether a covenant will or will not run with the land does not depend so much on whether it is to be performed on the land itself as on whether it tends directly or necessarily to enhance its value or render it more beneficial and convenient to those by whom it is owned or occupied; and, even though a covenant is one which touches the land, it is a question of intention in each case to be determined on the construction of the particular instrument with due regard to the nature of the covenant and the surrounding circumstances whether its benefit or burden does in fact run with the land at law.³⁸

Covenants which are personal and collateral to the land do not run with the land;³⁹ and, as a rule, covenants relating to personal property do not run with the land.⁴⁰

Where a statute declares what covenants in grants of real property run with the land, it has been held that, in addition to those specifically named, such covenants as by reason of their character are within the meaning of the statute also run with the land.⁴¹

§ 57. Interest or Estate to Which Annexable

Ordinarily, a covenant runs only with the legal title, and, if any estate passes which creates privity, it is sufficient to cause the covenant to run with the land.

Although a different rule may prevail in equity,⁴² ordinarily covenants run only with the legal title to lands and tenements.⁴³

If any estate passes, so as to create privity, it is sufficient to carry the covenants.⁴⁴ Thus, the legal possession of land, although the lowest interest or title that a person can have, when conveyed, creates a sufficient privity of estate between the grantor and the grantee to carry the covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment through successive conveyances to a remote grantee.⁴⁵

Covenants may run with incorporeal as well as with corporeal hereditaments,⁴⁶ for otherwise the covenantee might be deprived of the beneficial use of the land;⁴⁷ but there is some authority which seems opposed to this doctrine,⁴⁸ especially if the covenant was made subsequent to the deed.⁴⁹

§ 58. Necessity of Privity of Estate

Privity of estate ordinarily is essential in order that a covenant may run with the land.

Ordinarily, a covenant may run with the land only when there is a subsisting privity of estate between the covenantor and covenantee,⁵⁰ that is, when the land itself, or some estate or interest therein, even though less than the entire title, to which the covenant may attach as its vehicle of conveyance, is transferred;⁵¹ and, if there is no privity of estate between the contracting parties, the assignee will not be bound by, nor have the benefit of, any covenants between the contracting parties,⁵² notwithstanding they relate to the land which he takes by purchase or assignment from one of the parties to the contract.⁵³ The covenant of a stranger to the title is incapable of transmission by a mere conveyance of the land.⁵⁴ Particularly is privity of estate essential in the case of covenants imposing burdens,⁵⁵ although such privity may not be required in the case of covenants conferring benefits.⁵⁶

(2) Where deed from realty company created covenant running with the land for payment of annual charge for improvements on residential tract then being developed by company, and provided that such charge should create lien enforceable by property owner's association thereafter to be organized, such association was in effect in privity of estate with subsequent owner of land and could foreclose the lien.—Neponset Property Owners' Ass'n v. Effect of use of words "heirs and assigns"

Whatever confusion may exist in the cases with reference to the use of the words "heirs and assigns" it is clear that they cannot dispense with some privity of estate in order to carry the covenant with the land, and it has never been held that a covenant which, in its nature or otherwise, is personal is made to run with the land by the mere employment of the words.—Mygatt v. Coe, 42 N.E. 17, 147 N.Y. 456.

chose in action, see the C.J.S. title Dower § 42, also 19 C.J. p 494 note 87, a covenant of warranty in a deed from her husband which she has signed to release her dower interest is not a covenant by her running with the land so as to make her liable for a breach thereof;⁵⁷ and the same is true of a husband's covenants in a conveyance of his wife's land, unless it appears that he, as well as his wife, is in possession of the land and delivers such possession to the grantee.⁵⁸

§ 59. Covenant as Part of Conveyance

In order that a covenant may run with the land the agreement must be an instrument of conveyance or grant of an easement.

Ordinarily, privity of estate is necessary in order that a covenant may run with the land, see § 58 supra, and such privity can be spelled out only in case the agreement is or can be regarded as an instrument of conveyance or grant of an easement,⁵⁹ particularly where a grant of an estate is required by statutory regulation.⁶⁰

§ 60. Covenant for Heirs and Assigns

The use of the words "heirs and assigns" ordinarily is not controlling in determining whether a covenant runs with the land.

According to the common-law rule, claimed to have been formulated in Spencer's case, a covenant which concerned a thing not in esse would not run with the land unless the words "heirs and assigns" were included in the covenant.⁶¹ This rule has been followed in some jurisdictions,⁶² but it has been severely criticized by various courts,⁶³ and the modern trend has been more to relax the rule than to follow it.⁶⁴ The rule which now seems sustained by the better reasoning as well as by the weight of authority is that, where the covenant is of such nature and character that it may run with the land, the words "heirs and assigns" are not controlling if it can reasonably be inferred from the language of the instrument that the parties intended that the covenant should run with the land,⁶⁵ even if the covenant concerns a thing not in esse.⁶⁶

Express provisions binding a party's heirs and assigns evidence an intention to create a covenant running with the land,⁶⁷ but are not necessarily conclusive as to the intention of the parties which may be determined from the deed and the surrounding circumstances.⁶⁸ Likewise, the absence of the words "heirs and assigns," or words of similar import, may be considered in connection with the context of the deed in arriving at the intent of the parties.⁶⁹

§ 61. Effect of Agreement of Parties

By agreement a covenant may be prevented from running, or may be made to run, with the land.

Although the nature and character of a covenant may be such that it would ordinarily run with the land, yet the contracting parties may, by the express terms of their contract, provide that it shall not so run.⁷⁰ However, the absence of a specific statement that the covenant runs with the land does not indicate that it was intended not to run.⁷¹

A covenant manifesting an agreement that it should run with the land, and complying with other requirements passes with the land and inures to the benefit of subsequent assignees;⁷² but, on the other hand, no agreement between the parties, however strongly expressed, can cause a covenant to be attached to the land if it is not of such a nature that the law permits it to be attached,⁷³ although such an agreement may create a lien on the land as against a subsequent purchaser with notice,⁷⁴ notwithstanding it will not bind such purchaser personally.⁷⁵

§ 62. Covenants Conferring Benefits

A covenant conferring benefits may run with the land.

There are many cases to the effect that the question whether a covenant will or will not run with the land does not depend so much on whether it is to be performed on the land itself as on whether it tends directly or necessarily to enhance its value or render it more beneficial and convenient to those by whom it is owned and occupied,⁷⁶ and that, if this be the case, every successive assignee of the land will be entitled to enforce the covenant;⁷⁷ but

Sufficiency of language

Language in quitclaim deed by son of his interest in father's land to father and his "remaining heirs," with recital that grantor was an heir is not such as to give character of a warranty or "covenant running with the land."—Douglass v. Hammel, 285 S.W. 433, 313 Mo. 514.

"Successors and assigns"

this doctrine is limited to those cases in which the rights conferred are of such a character as to attach to the land and pass as incidents thereto.⁷⁸ In all other cases, privity of estate is essential, as considered supra § 58.

Where the statute so provides, in order for a covenant to run with the land it must be a covenant for the direct benefit of the land conveyed.⁷⁹

§ 63. Covenant of Seizin

In the absence of contrary statutory regulations, a covenant of seizin generally does not run with the land.

As is explained in §§ 22, 40, supra, the covenant of seizin ordinarily is regarded as a personal covenant in praesenti, and, unless otherwise controlled by statute,⁸⁰ as a general rule does not run with the land nor pass to an assignee,⁸¹ although according to many authorities the rule is limited to cases in which no possession accompanies the deed.⁸² Moreover, according to some authorities which follow the English rule, the covenant of seizin runs with land.⁸³

"Direct benefit of the property"

The words "direct benefit of the property," as used in Civ.Code § 1462, providing that covenants made for the direct benefit of the property run with the land, means any covenant which affects the title to real property or any interest or estate therein of the covenantee, and such covenant is one which is intended to restore to the covenantee or the owner of the land some right with respect thereto which he has parted with pro re nata or for a special purpose; in other words, a covenant for the direct benefit of the estate or interest of the covenantee in the land mortgaged.—Sacramento Suburban Fruit Lands Co. v. § 64. Covenant of Right to Convey

In the absence of contrary statutory regulations, the covenant of right to convey ordinarily does not run with the land.

As is explained in §§ 22, 41 supra, the covenant of right to convey is usually regarded as a personal covenant in praesenti, and, unless otherwise provided by statute,⁸⁴ ordinarily does not run with the land.⁸⁵

However, it has been held that, where a grantor is in actual possession at the date of the delivery of the deed, although by his own disseizin, his covenant of right to convey is real and runs with the land.⁸⁶

§ 65. Covenant against Encumbrances

In the absence of contrary statutory regulations, a covenant against encumbrances generally does not run with the land.

As is stated in §§ 22, 42 supra, the covenant against encumbrances ordinarily is regarded as a personal covenant in praesenti, and, unless otherwise controlled by express or implied statutory regulations,⁸⁷ as a general rule does not run with the land.⁸⁸

Special covenant against reassessment

A covenant, "It is hereby understood that there is a certain reassessment for street improvement now in litigation against said property which grantors hereby agree and promise to pay should the court adjudge the same as a lien against said property," was held intended to operate prospectively, and hence to run with the land, so that a remote grantee could sue for breach occurring during his ownership.—Pearson v. Richards, 211 P. 167, 106 Or. 78.

On the other hand, according to some authorities the covenant is substantially one of indemnity, see § 42 supra, and as such runs with the land and passes to a remote grantee notwithstanding it is technically broken on the execution of the original deed,⁸⁹ especially where a manifest intention appears that it shall operate in the future, as where it is intimately associated with the covenant for quiet enjoyment or for further assurance,⁹⁰ although it has been said that, where a covenant against encumbrances is coupled with, and supplemental to, the covenant of warranty, it would seem to be in its operation no more than a covenant against encumbrances in praesenti joined with a covenant of warranty in futuro.⁹¹

Assignability of choses in action. Where a chose in action is assignable, see Assignments §§ 5, 30, it has been held that a covenant against encumbrances runs with the land,⁹² although there is contrary authority.⁹³

Unless otherwise controlled by a statute or an agreement, a covenant for quiet enjoyment runs with the land.

As is explained in § 45 supra, a covenant for quiet enjoyment is prospective, and, unless a statute, or an agreement between the parties, negatives such transmission,⁹⁴ the covenant runs with the land.⁹⁵ Until breached, as is shown in § 74 infra, the covenant passes with the fee to any subsequent grantee of the same title,⁹⁶ although the assignment is by quitclaim deed.⁹⁷

This doctrine applies even where the covenant is regarded as a personal obligation,⁹⁸ and in some jurisdictions it has been applied in cases where neither the grantor nor his immediate grantee ever had possession.⁹⁹

§ 67. Covenant for Further Assurance

In the absence of contrary statutory regulations, a covenant for further assurance runs with the land.

As is observed in § 46 supra, the covenant for further assurance is in futuro, and, in the absence of contrary statutory regulations, and until a breach, see § 74 infra, the covenant runs with the land,¹ and inures to the benefit of any subsequent grantee.²

§ 68. Covenant of Warranty

In the absence of a statute or an agreement to the contrary, a covenant of warranty ordinarily runs with the land.

As §§ 47-49 supra explain, a covenant of warranty ordinarily is in futuro, and, unless a statute, or an agreement between the parties, negatives such transmission,³ until broken, see § 74 infra, the covenant runs with the land,⁴ whether the warranty is general⁵ or special,⁶ and inures to the benefit of subsequent grantees.⁷

However, according to some authorities, the covenant of warranty will not run with the land where the grant vests neither title⁸ nor possession in the grantee.⁹ Furthermore, the implied warranty between parties to a partition, whether coparceners, joint tenants, or tenants in common, does not run with the land.¹⁰

§ 69. Covenants Imposing Burdens in General

A covenant imposing a burden, including a covenant to do an affirmative act, as to erect and maintain a fence, ordinarily may run with the land.

As a general rule a covenant imposing a burden, if in other respects such as the law permits to attach to land, will run with the land as readily as one conferring a benefit,¹¹ although the rule does not apply to unreasonable burdens.¹² The burden must redound primarily to the benefit of related lands rather than to the grantor personally.¹³ Thus a covenant by a grantee to pay an encumbrance does not run with the land.¹⁴

Although privity of estate generally is required, see § 58 supra, it seems that the privity of estate required in this class of cases between the covenantor and the covenantee means only that the covenant must impose such a burden on the land of the covenantor as to be in substance or to carry with it a grant of an easement or quasi easement, or must be in aid of such a grant,¹⁵ and it has been said that the material inquiries are whether the parties meant to charge the land and whether the burden is one that may be imposed consistently with policy and principle.¹⁶

some authorities an affirmative covenant ordinarily is personal,¹⁷ as a general rule an affirmative covenant, as well as a negative or restrictive covenant, may run with the land.¹⁸

Covenants as to fences. When otherwise of the nature and character to constitute a covenant real, covenants stipulating for the erection and maintenance of fences will run with the land¹⁹ and bind remote assignees of the covenantor;²⁰ and it seems that this rule may apply to agreements between adjoining landowners as to a division fence,²¹ especially if in existence at the time of the agreement.²²

However, a covenant running with the land for the erection and maintenance of fences cannot, it has been held, be created by a stipulation in a deed poll,²³ nor by parol agreement,²⁴ nor by mere usage;²⁵ and hence the mere fact that adjoining landowners had long been accustomed jointly to maintain a partition fence would not constitute a covenant running with the land.²⁶

Where an heir or assign is not bound by a covenant as to matters not in esse because he is not named, see § 60 supra, a covenant by a grantor to build a fence along an adjoining railroad right of way, and, on neglect to do so, not to hold the company responsible for any damages resulting to the grantor, omitting the word "assigns," does not run with the land.²⁷

§ 70. Covenants as to Use of Property

Whether covenants as to the use of property run with the land is discussed in the C.J.S. title Deeds § 167, also 18 C.J. p 393 note 8-p 397 note 59.

§ 71. — Buildings, Structures and Improvements

Covenants relating to the erection and maintenance of buildings, improvements, and other structures on land as constituting covenants running with the land are considered in the C.J.S. title Deeds § 167, also 18 C.J. p 393 note 8-p 397 note 59; while in the C.J.S. title Party Walls § 22, also 47 C.J. p 1357 note 86-p 1359 note 3, covenants relating to party walls are discussed.

Covenant to pay assessment

A covenant in a deed which recited payment of two dollars as consideration, and that as part of consideration grantee agreed to protect and save harmless grantor from assessments for "opening" of proposed avenue which would abut grantor's property after conveyance manifested intent of parties that covenant provided for postponement of payment of actual consideration and should run with the land since assessments for street improvements are against the land only, but the covenant did not include covenant to pay assessment cost of sewerage such street.—Maher

§ 73. Covenants Creating Easement, Lien or Charge

A covenant creating an easement, lien, or charge may run with the land.

As is explained in the C.J.S. title Easements § 28, also 19 C.J. p 910 note 69 et seq, an easement on land may be created by covenant, and generally such covenants will run with the land so as to bind subsequent owners,²⁸ although the rule has not always been upheld where the easement constituted a burden on the land,²⁹ especially when the deed containing the covenant has not been duly acknowledged and recorded as required by statute.³⁰

Covenants creating charges and liens. A lien or charge fixed on land by a covenant may run with the land and follow it into the hands of subsequent purchasers,³¹ such as a covenant to pay rent,³² or to make repairs or divide the expense of repairs.³³ Likewise, unless otherwise controlled by statute,³⁴ a covenant to pay taxes and assessments has been held to run with the land,³⁵ although, according to some authorities, such a covenant is considered as purely personal.³⁶

Furthermore, a covenant to furnish gas or pay a yearly sum in lieu thereof has been held to run with the land,³⁷ although a covenant to furnish gas has also been held to be personal.³⁸ Where land is conveyed in consideration of a covenant by the grantee to support the grantor, or other persons designated, such covenant runs with the land and is binding on subsequent owners,³⁹ although such a covenant has also been held to be personal.⁴⁰

Where no limitation is put to the absolute and unqualified ownership of the grantee, and there is no condition, charge, or lien, a covenant of the grantee contained in the conveyance does not run with the land.⁴¹

§ 74. Duration of Real Covenants

Real covenants cease to run with the land on the termination of the estate and on breach.

Where a covenant is annexed to an estate, in the absence of a breach it runs as long as does the estate.⁴² On the other hand, a covenant attached to an estate cannot endure beyond the termination of the estate.⁴³

Furthermore, a covenant, when broken, ceases to run with the land,⁴⁴ and becomes a chose in action.⁴⁵ Whether an assignee of the land may enforce such a chose in action is discussed infra § 82.

§ 75. Release or Discharge from Liability

Broadly speaking, release or discharge from liability on covenants running with the land may result from a deed of release, from parol agreement, or from any matter in pais showing a real or conclusively presumed intent to terminate the covenant.

The English doctrine that a covenant which runs with the land can be released only by an instrument of as high a nature as the deed containing it, although some exceptions to the rule were there recognized, seems to have been followed in a few of the states,⁴⁶ although recordation of the release has been held unnecessary;⁴⁷ but, if such a release is required at all, it would seem important that it should be recorded to protect the warrantor against the suit of a subsequent purchaser.⁴⁸ By the great weight of American authority, however, such a covenant may be released either by matter in pais, or by parol,⁴⁹ the intention of the parties being the controlling factor.⁵⁰

Perpetual duration

When grantor conveys all title to real property to grantees "their successors and assigns forever," covenants running with land, constituting part of consideration for conveyance, are perpetual and irrevocable.—Northern Ohio Traction & Light Co. v. Quaker Oats Co., supra.

Abandonment of estate by the grantee will not terminate affirmative covenants, particularly after acceptance of benefits.—Northern Ohio Traction & Light Co. v. Quaker Oats Co., supra.

Death of covenantee will not revoke a covenant running with the land before the end of its term.—In re Scott, 193 N.Y.S. 403, 200 App.Div. 599.

Surviving destruction of building

A distinct part of a building may be conveyed with covenants, agreements, or conditions creating rights in the grantee which will survive the destruction of the building.—Weaver v. Osborne, 134 N.W. 168, 154 Iowa 10, 38 L.R.A.N.S., 706.

Where deed reserved to grantor right to alter or annul restrictions "by written agreement," informal writing evidencing grantor's consent to change in use of premises was sufficient, it being unnecessary to execute formal instrument or to cause it to be recorded.—People, on Complaint of Wolff v. A fundamental change in the neighborhood, as shown infra this section, may terminate a restrictive covenant, as may a foreclosure sale of the land under a mortgage,⁵¹ and the grantee of property subject to restrictive covenant and his grantee abandon the restriction by the making and accepting of a conveyance free of the restrictions so that they are estopped from enforcing it.⁵² If full recovery is had by a person entitled to sue therefor, the covenant is satisfied and it may no longer be regarded as binding in favor of the grantee and his privies in estate.⁵³ One accepting a deed with knowledge that the property is less in quantity than warranted in the deed and failing to complain within a reasonable time may not thereafter recover for the shortage.⁵⁴

Restrictive covenants are not terminated by subsequent sale of other property without such restrictions,⁵⁵ abandonment of restrictive covenants is not shown by acquiescence in mere minor violations thereof,⁵⁶ and an owner or lessee of property for the benefit of which restrictions have been created will not be deemed to have abandoned the covenant so long as it is of value to him;⁵⁷ nor, it has been held, will relinquishment of a covenant by acquiescence in breach, or waiver, be inferred from delay in taking steps to prevent its violation.⁵⁸ The neglect of a purchaser to record his title does not release the vendor from his covenants;⁵⁹ and a grantee by releasing his grantor from liability on his covenants does not thereby affect his own title.⁶⁰ A covenant of seizin is not extinguished by a release of the estate without covenants,⁶¹ nor by arranged foreclosures designed to clear title;⁶² and release of a title insurer on payment of a certain sum does not serve to effect the release of the grantor from his covenant against encumbrances.⁶³

In order that a release may bind a subsequent assignee it must have been made prior to the assignment,⁶⁴ unless the releasor has paid the damages occasioned by a breach of the covenant to such assignee.⁶⁵ Where the continuity of a covenant is broken by the conveyance of land with new covenants, the subsequent grantee cannot maintain an action against the original covenantor;⁶⁶ and an assignment by a vendor to a third person of his rights against his warrantors, made after the eviction of his vendee in possession under contract of sale, cannot in equity deprive the vendee of his recourse against such warrantors.⁶⁷ Grantees of land subject to restrictive covenants may convey the whole tract free thereof except as against the original covenantor or his privies.⁶⁸

Changed conditions rendering a covenant substantially inapplicable to the new set of circumstances may operate to terminate the covenant,⁶⁹ as where changes occur in the neighborhood so radical in character as to defeat the purpose of a re-

Deliberate default

Where vendors, who were unable to give good title, entered into an arrangement with the purchaser whereby he defaulted, the purchase-money mortgage was foreclosed, and the vendors then foreclosed an earlier deed of trust, under an agreement that they should buy in the property, and, having cut off outstanding titles, convey good title to the purchaser, such arrangement was consistent with the covenant of seizin in the original conveyance and did not supersede it.—Crosby v. strictive covenant,⁷⁰ such as one against negro ownership,⁷¹ although, where the change is not so fundamental in character as to destroy the general purpose of the restrictive covenant, it will remain in full force and effect.⁷² A change in the territory surrounding the restricted area will not necessarily terminate the restrictions,⁷³ and, where it appears that the covenant is for the exclusive benefit of the dominant lot and still of substantial value to it, a court of equity will restrain violation notwithstanding the changed condition of the neighborhood wherein the lot is situated.⁷⁴ The mere fact that because of changed conditions removal of restrictive covenants would greatly enhance the value of plaintiff's land will not justify their removal at plaintiff's suit as against other owners who insist on maintenance of the restrictions,⁷⁵ and, in a proper case, equity will enforce restrictive covenants remaining of substantial value, even though changed conditions will cause hardship to the servient estate.⁷⁶

§ 76. — Agreement of Parties

Agreements to terminate restrictive covenants are effective if, and only if, joined in by all interested parties.

A covenant running with the land may be modified or terminated by agreement of all interested parties,⁷⁷ although it will not be discharged by an agreement made by less than all interested parties,⁷⁸ and, where the covenant permits termination of restrictions on consent of a specified percentage of lot owners, a consent by less than the specified percentage is ineffectual.⁷⁹

§ 77. — Acts or Omissions of Covenantor

The acts or omissions of the covenantor are ordinarily not of themselves sufficient to terminate covenants running with the land.

The covenantor, who has created restrictions by his original grant, lacks power to discharge cove-

Where plaintiff joined with other property owners of the district in signing a written covenant, which was duly recorded, to prevent negroes from buying or obtaining homes within such district, and later sued to be relieved from such covenant, and, where the evidence showed such subsequent change of conditions within the district by reason of an influx of negro residents as to defeat the main purpose of the covenant, it was held that the restrictive covenant had become nugatory and that plaintiff was entitled to be relieved therefrom.—Pickel v. McCawley, supra.

Change not shown as to particular block in city

Where property owners in neighborhood made agreement involving entire city block against use and occupancy by negroes, fact that large number of negroes thereafter occupied adjoining block and intersecting streets would not preclude enforcement of such agreement by enjoining occupancy by negro, in absence of showing that property had become untenanted and unmarketable.—*Mead v. nants running with the land by his acts or omissions as against the equitable rights of subsequent owners of such land,⁸⁰ and the grantor's release of some lots from restrictive covenants will not bind purchasers of other lots who bought in reliance on such covenants.⁸¹ The grantor may, however, by appropriate reservations in his original conveyances, preclude the inception of restrictive covenants incapable of subsequent release by himself.⁸²

§ 78. — Merger or Revesting of Estate in Covenantor

Merger of estates into a single ownership, as in the case of a revesting in the covenantor, may terminate covenants running with the land, although a revesting of title as to part only does not destroy covenants as to unrevested portions of the land.

The revesting of the covenantor with the same estate he has conveyed extinguishes all covenants running with the land,⁸³ because all benefit of the warranty vests in him who is liable under the warranty,⁸⁴ and it has been held that this rule is applicable to the grantee in a deed who has given a bond to the grantor to reconvey the granted premises on demand;⁸⁵ nor has such covenantor any claim in warranty for dangers of eviction, existing

when he himself sold, as against the intermediate holders,⁸⁶ although revesting in the covenantor of title to only part of the land subject to covenants will not extinguish covenants as to the other parts of the land, there being in such case no merger of a dominant and servient tenement.⁸⁷ A covenant of warranty does not include an encumbrance which the grantee by an instrument of as high a nature as the deed has engaged to discharge,⁸⁸ hence, the grantee, or one holding under him with notice,⁸⁹ cannot enforce such covenant as an estoppel against his own covenant of warranty of the same premises to the original covenantor,⁹⁰ but a promise by a vendee to his grantor subsequent to the purchase to pay off an existing mortgage against the premises out of an installment of the purchase price before the same would be due is not binding without a consideration to support it.⁹¹ It has been held, however, that a covenantor's covenants as to building restrictions are not discharged on his subsequent acquisition and resale of the premises.⁹² Foreclosure of a mortgage revesting absolute title in the covenantor may terminate restrictive covenants in the original conveyance.⁹³

ownership thereof extinguishes mutual restrictive covenants.⁹⁴

§ 79. — Reconveyance with Similar Covenants

Identical covenants in deeds of conveyance and of reconveyance may discharge each other; this is not true, however, of a reconveyance by way of mortgage before forfeiture by breach of condition.

One taking an absolute deed to realty by way of security for debt, which deed contains the usual covenants, is not bound to a subsequent grantee of his debtor on identical covenants contained in a deed of reconveyance, given the debtor on repayment;⁹⁵ but, where the owner of realty conveys it to another by general warranty deed containing the usual covenants, and his vendee gives back a deed of trust or mortgage securing a part of the purchase price and containing like covenants of warranty, the vendee does not thereby release the vendor from liability on the original covenants in the warranty deed,⁹⁶ unless the grantee after breach of the conditions in the mortgage surrenders possession to the grantor and becomes his tenant.⁹⁷

Where the grantee in a deed to a strip of land which abutted on lots of the grantor covenanted that he would keep the strip open as a private way for the use of the owners

Where deed is taken in name of one acting for himself and another, the latter is a real party in interest, and may maintain an action on the deed, for breach of warranty of good right to convey the same as the named grantee may do.—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Clinton, Iowa v. Otero, supra.

The authorities are not fully in accord as to whether a third person may sue on a promise made for his benefit, although the prevailing rule in the United States, stated in Contracts § 519 c (1), is that the action may be maintained.

With respect to a real covenant, as a general rule, it may be enforced by one for whose benefit it was made,⁹⁸ provided, according to some authorities, that he is plainly designated by the instrument as the beneficiary, and the covenant is made for his sole benefit.⁹⁹ The mere fact that a third person may be benefited by performance of a covenant does not authorize him to enforce it.¹ In jurisdictions where a third person may enforce a real covenant made for his benefit, he may sue thereon in his own name, at least where authorized to do so by statute.²

It has been held that creditors can exercise all the rights of their debtors in actions of warranty.³

§ 81. — Covenantees

The covenantee may sue for the breach of a real covenant, although a mortgagor covenantee has been denied such right.

For the breach of a real covenant, the person with whom it is made may sue,⁴ unless, as is shown infra § 82, he has parted with his title.

Common enterprise

Where owners of island contracted to reclaim island by draining it and maintaining levees, obligated themselves to pay proportionate share of cost, and agreed that covenants should run with, and be perpetual burden on, land, covenants were mutual and any breach became breach of all covenantors, and hence lessees of one of owners, even if they were "assigns" of covenantor, were mutual covenantors and covenantees with

On the other hand, where a purchaser of real estate causes the property to be conveyed to a third person as security for the purchase money borrowed from him, it has been held that the interest of the third person is that of a mortgagee, and that the purchaser, as equitable owner, is entitled to maintain an action on the covenants in the deed.⁷

c. Right of assignee taking conveyance after breach

a. Right of Owner at Time of Breach

The owner of the land at the time of the breach, including an owner of part of the land, may sue on a real covenant.

Where a covenant runs with the land, the owner of the land at the time of its breach, whether an immediate or remote grantee or assignee, may maintain an action for its breach in his own name against any or all of the covenantors,⁸ although the holder of a real covenant can have but one satisfaction for its breach.⁹

On the other hand, one who is not the owner of the land at the time of the breach ordinarily is not entitled to enforce a real covenant.¹⁰ The holder of the legal title at the time of the breach has been held to be the proper person to sue,¹¹ gave nothing to his immediate grantor other than credit on past-due debt.—Eves v. Curtiss, 167 P. 748, 98 Wash. 367.

(2) Vendor may be liable to subvendee for breach of covenant of warranty of title in vendor's deed, even if vendor took legal title to land merely as accommodation to vendee, and made no profit on the transaction and even though vendee would have been estopped to assert breach, where vendor's and vendee's warranty deeds were contemporaneously executed and subvendee paid part of consideration directly to vendor in payment of money advanced by vendor for vendee.—Long v. Sullivan, 183 S.E. 71, 52 Ga.App. 318.

Insertion of another grantee after execution

Where, without knowledge or consent of grantor, name of grantee in deed was erased, and name of another was inserted, party whose name was substituted cannot recover from grantor for breach of covenant of warranty in deed.—Sipes v. Perdomo, 247 P. 689, 118 Okl. 181.

Owner of part of tract; apportionment. While it is a general principle of law founded on convenience, that covenants are not apportionable,¹³ yet since the land itself is apportionable, whenever justice or even greater convenience requires a covenant to be apportioned,¹⁴ an exception to the general rule prevails.¹⁵

A covenant that runs with the land is divisible into as many parts or interests as the land itself may be divided into by subsequent successive conveyances,¹⁶ and the grantee of each parcel or interest may, as to the same, maintain suit on such covenant against the original covenantor or his legal representative;¹⁷ but the interest of the grantee must be in part of the land as distinguished from part of the estate.¹⁸

b. Right of Former Grantee

Unless a grantee is bound to indemnify his assignee, he may not sue for breach of a real covenant occurring after he has conveyed the land.

As a rule, where land conveyed with real covenants has passed by subsequent conveyances through the hands of various covenantees, only the last covenantor or assignee in whose possession the land is when the covenant is broken may sue for its breach,¹⁹ and his right of action extends to any or to all of the prior covenantors.²⁰ However, when by the nature and terms of his conveyance, an intermediate grantor is bound to indemnify the grantee during whose ownership the breach occurred, he may sue a prior covenantor in his own name²¹ after he has been compelled to satisfy the claim of such grantee.²²

Where a real covenant is breached and the own-

C. C. Slaughter Co., Tex.Civ. App., 217 S.W. 716, error refused.

(3) Where the owner in fee of land gives his bond for conveyance with warranty, and after the vendee has paid most of the purchase price and the vendor has become insolvent, a holder of the paramount title recovers the land, the right of recourse which the vendor has against his grantor will in equity vest in the vendee.—Stewart v. Reason for rule

"The reason of the rule seems to be to prevent the obvious injustice which would arise from making prior vendees liable to all subsequent owners in turn, and thus pay damages more than once for the same breach of covenant. The principle that the intermediate covenantee can never sue until he has satisfied the damages was adopted to prevent such an injustice."—Kenyon v. Russell, 5 Tenn.App. 401, 414.

Fayment not compelled

Where the intermediate grantor pays his grantee's claim for breach of warranty, he may obtain indemnity from his covenantor, even though he was not compelled to make the er of the land at the time of the breach then conveys the land, in some cases such owner has been permitted to sue,²³ at least where he has been compelled to pay damages.²⁴ In other cases, a former grantee has been denied the right to sue,²⁵ at least where he has suffered no damage as a result of the breach of the covenant;²⁶ and, as is observed in subdivision c of this section, the assignee has been permitted to sue. Furthermore, it has been said that, where the assignment is made after breach, the assignor is the only person who can bring the action,²⁷ but this doctrine has been repudiated.²⁸ At any rate, the grantee may sue for a breach of a real covenant if in his conveyance he reserves the cause of action.²⁹

c. Right of Assignee Taking Conveyance after Breach

As a general rule, in the absence of an express assignment, an assignee may not sue on a real covenant for a breach occurring prior to his acquisition of the land.

A real covenant which has been broken ceases to run with the land and becomes a mere chose in action, see § 74 supra, and unless such right of action is assignable, see Assignments §§ 30, 31, and is expressly assigned,³⁰ as a general rule, it does not pass with a transfer of the land so as to enable a remote grantee to sue thereon.³¹ The right

Effect of purchase by grantor at foreclosure sale

Grantee is entitled to sue for breach of covenants of warranty which occurred after grantors had foreclosed purchase-money mortgage, since a foreclosure sale operates as an assignment of the cause of action for breach of warranty only if the loss falls on the purchaser at the foreclosure sale.—Crosby v. Evans, Mo.App., 195 S.W. 514, certified questions answered 219 S.W. 948, 281 Mo. 202.

On partial failure of title to land conveyed, grantee may keep what he has and sue on the covenant of warranty for what he has lost.—Lost Creek Coal & Mineral Land Co. v. Hendon, 110 So. 308, 215 Ala. 212.

A right of action on a covenant may not be assigned without conveying the land.—Ravenal v. Ingram, 42 S.E. 967, 131 N.C. 549.

Assignee takes rights of assignor

Where grantee under a covenant conveyed the land to plaintiff subject to an outstanding assessment which he had not paid, and assigned to plaintiff his cause of action for breach of the covenant by reason of the assessment, plaintiff acquired no greater cause of action than her assignee possessed, and could recover only nominal damages, even though she paid the assessment before suing the covenantor.—Mandigo v. Conway et al., 90 N.Y.S. 324, 45 Misc. 389.

Intermediate transfer to original vendor

A defendant vendor, after placing a mortgage on land, sold the land to another who sold it to defendant bank without warranting the title, but with a complete transfer and subrogation of all rights and actions of warranty against all former proprietors. Thereupon the bank sold back the property to the vendor, who then sold it to plaintiff, both transfers being by warranty deed. Subsequently, the mortgage was foreclosed, and plaintiff was compelled to pay. When the bank sold the property to the vendor, it did not warrant against the mortgage debt, since the vendor was the "principal debtor," within Civ.Code § 3410; and since the vendor had no right of action against the bank as warrantor to protect him against the mortgage debt on which he was primarily liable, he could not subrogate his transferee (plaintiff) to a right of action against the bank as warrantor against the payment of such obligation.—Carpenter v. Herndon, 136 So. 577, 173 La. 239.

of action is personal to the one during whose ownership the covenant was broken and he, or his assignee, is the only person who can bring the suit.³²

However, according to some authorities, a conveyance of the land to a remote grantee thereby passes the claim for breach of a real covenant³³; and enables such grantee to sue thereon;³⁴ and the English and Canadian rule is that a covenant is a continuing obligation for the breach of which a subsequent grantee may maintain an action against the original covenantor, although the breach occurs prior to conveyance to such grantee.³⁵ Furthermore, certain covenants which frequently are regarded as personal, such as a covenant of seizin or a covenant against encumbrances, see §§ 63, 65, supra, nevertheless are held in some jurisdictions where choses in action are assignable to run with the land although technically broken when made and to inure to the benefit of a remote grantee who suffers damage.³⁶ However, a real covenant, such as a covenant of warranty or a covenant for quiet enjoyment, no longer runs with the land for the benefit of an assignee if the eviction or actual damage has occurred prior to the assignment.³⁷

But he who executes

a mere quit-claim, which involves no assertion of title on his part and does not purport to pass any, and in which he undertakes no responsibility, cannot, in our judgment, be regarded as intending to transfer anything more than such interest in the property as he may have, and such covenants as in strictness run with the land."—Colver v. Intermediate transfer subject to encroachment

"The plaintiff's immediate grantor . . . purchased expressly subject to the incumbrance; and while he owned the land he could not take advantage of the original covenant. . . . The effect of his purchase, subject to the assessment, was to relieve the prior grantors from any liability to him on the covenant. . . . [He] conveyed to the plaintiff with a covenant against incumbrances. But the plaintiff acquired only such rights as his immediate grantor could assert against prior grantors."—Geiszler v. Void deed

(1) Grantee under void deed cannot hold prior grantors on their covenants, even though he has been in possession of the land claiming ownership under the void deed.—Beardsley v. Knight, 4 Vt. 471.

nants pass with the title without any warranty from the immediate grantor.³⁹

Covenants running with the land pass with the title when transferred by act of law,⁴⁰ although it seems that this rule is subject to some limitations.⁴¹

A purchaser at a judicial or execution or foreclosure sale is entitled to the benefit of all covenants running with the land contained in a prior deed to the land conveyed.⁴² Likewise, a sale by a trustee under power of sale contained in the instrument creating the trust will vest in the purchaser the right to the benefit of real covenants in prior deeds to the land,⁴³ but a purchaser under a commissioner's sale takes no benefit of the covenants in a prior deed to the land, where the decree of confirmation of the sale is reversed before a deed is actually issued.⁴⁴

(3) Defendant is liable on his covenant to a subsequent grantee, although the intermediate deeds were void, where there was a judgment in an action between the defendant's grantee and the subsequent grantee determining that all of defendant's grantee's interest in the land was owned by the subsequent grantee.—Talbert v. Grist, 201 S.W. 906, 198 Mo.App. 492.

Intermediate grantors need not have had possession of the land.—Chandler v. Brown, 59 N.H. 370.

Title not perfected until after conveyance

Where administrator applied to ordinary for leave to sell lands of an intestate, which was granted and tract sold, that at the time administrator had only an interest in the land evidenced by bond for title from vendor to intestate with part of purchase money paid would not invalidate sale and prevent purchaser from suing original vendor on breach of warranty of title, purchaser having paid full purchase price to administrator, who turned balance over to vendor, in view of Civ.Code 1910 § 4192.—*Rowan v. Relation back of title on foreclosure
When title vests in a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure, it relates back and takes effect as of the date of the mortgage, and the rights of a purchaser against prior covenants are of that date, and subsequent grantees of the mortgagor have no interest and cannot join with the purchaser or his assignee in an action for breach of the warranty.—*Allis v. Privity of conscience

"A true covenant which runs with the land runs by reason of privity of estate, and can only be enforced at law by the original parties thereto or their privies. Equity . . . will enforce a lawful contract against a person who takes with notice 'which rests upon privity of conscience.' In such a case, the person violating the agreement is a privy in conscience with the maker thereof."

§ 84. — Privity of Estate between Covenantor and Grantee

As a general rule, privity of estate between the covenantor and subsequent grantee is essential to enable the grantee to sue on a real covenant.

As a rule, a covenant can run with the land only when there is a privity of estate between the covenantor and the covenantee, see § 58 supra, and in order to give a right of action against the covenantor to the alienee of the covenantee, it is well settled that mere privity of contract between the covenantor and the alienee is not sufficient, but there must be a subsisting privity of estate between them;⁴⁵ and some estate to which the covenant may attach should, as a rule, have passed from the covenantor to the covenantee.⁴⁶

A subsequent grantee may not maintain an action for breach of a covenant if the covenantor had no title or possession at the date of his conveyance,⁴⁷ although it has been held that, if the cove-

Waiver of lack of privity

Where vendor accepted performance of land contract by, and executed warranty deed to, vendee's assignee, although the assignment was contrary to the terms of the contract, vendor could not subsequently assert lack of privity as defense to assignee's action for breach of covenant.—Mueller v. Bankers' Trust Co. of Muskegon, 247 N.W. 103, 262 Mich. 53.

Tenancy as sufficient interest to obtain real covenant

Where a tenant of a part of the landlord's land has trackage rights and terminal storage privileges on the remainder, the tenant, occupying the remainder, has sufficient interest therein to procure for the entire land a covenant with the railroad company running with the land, inuring to the benefit of the landlord and his future tenants.—Baird v. Erie R. Co., 129 N.Y.S. 329, 72 Misc. 162, affirmed 132 N.Y.S. 971, 148 App.Div. 452, affirmed 104 N.E. 614, 210 N.Y. 225.

Reason for rule

"Our view is that the covenants of a deed which is made by a grantor who has neither title nor possession to a grantee who obtains no posses-

nantee takes possession of and conveys the land to another, a sufficient privity is established between himself and his grantee to give the latter a right of action against the covenantor, even though he had neither title nor possession at the time of the execution of his covenant.⁴⁸

In some jurisdictions a covenant will not so run with the land as to give a right of action against the covenantor to the alienee of the covenantee unless there exists a privity of contract between them.⁴⁹

§ 85. — Heirs and Devisees

The heirs and devisees of a covenantee ordinarily are entitled to enforce real covenants.

The heirs and devisees of a covenantee are entitled to enforce covenants running with the land,⁵⁰

sion do not run with the land, and do not upon that principle pass with succeeding conveyances; and this not merely because the covenants are broken as soon as the deed is made, resulting in the accrual of a personal cause of action, but also because, inasmuch as the grantor gives no right to the land and the grantee takes none, no interest in it is passed and there is nothing to which the covenants can attach and the transfer of which they can follow. They cannot run with the realty because they have not become attached to it."—Colver v. McInturff, supra.

Covenant against encumbrances

The heirs of decedent who had conveyed certain land which was encumbered by a deed of trust could not maintain an action against a former grantor for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, where the encumbrance was not discharged by decedent before her death, or where it was not paid out of the assets of the estate.—*Ladd v. unless an evident intention is manifested to confine them to the covenantee,⁵¹ or unless the covenant has been broken in the lifetime of decedent,⁵² in which case the action can be brought by decedent's personal representative.⁵³

§ 86. Persons Liable on Real Covenants

For breach of a real covenant, the original and intermediate covenantors are liable; and where the covenant constitutes a burden on the land, a grantee of the owner of the land burdened is responsible for a breach.

Where a covenant runs with the land, the original and every intermediate covenantor are liable to the one during whose tenure the covenant is broken,⁵⁴ unless personal responsibility is expressly or by reason of the nature of the transaction impliedly excluded;⁵⁵ and unless the covenantee con-

Liability of partnership members on oral covenant

Grantor holding title as security

Grantor, who had held title as security, conveying to grantee at equitable owner's direction, without consideration from grantee, was not liable to grantee on warranty in deed to grantee or grantee's successors, who were not innocent purchasers.—Hopper v. Tancil, supra.

Contract as governing rights of parties

Where defendant, guardian of minors owning land, contracted with plaintiff to convey to him whatever title defendant could secure by probate court proceedings, and codefendant was selected as intermediary to convey such interest to plaintiff, neither defendant nor intermediary was bound by covenant in intermediary's deed; defendant did all that she was required to do by the contract and plaintiff knew that intermediary had no interest in the transaction.—Rich-

sents, a covenantor cannot evade responsibility for his covenant by transferring the obligation to a third person.⁵⁶ Where a statute so provides, only those who acquire the whole estate of the covenantor in some part of the property are liable on a real covenant.⁵⁷

As a general rule, no one is bound by the covenants of a deed who did not execute it and who is not named or referred to therein as being bound by the covenants.⁵⁸ Thus, the equitable owner of land is not liable for breach of a covenant contained in a deed executed by the holder of the legal title, where he does not join in the deed.⁵⁹ Furthermore, at common law, an undisclosed principal is not liable on covenants in a deed executed by his agent;⁶⁰ and under statutes abolishing the use or necessity of seals, an undisclosed principal has been held not to be liable on such covenants,⁶¹ at least where it is not shown that the principal ever owned any interest in the property, or was in possession of it, or that he received any of the consideration given by the grantee.⁶²

Since covenants are construed so as to carry into effect the intention of the parties, see § 20 supra, a grantor is not liable for breach of a real covenant where the only construction that can be placed on the covenant is that the grantor did not intend to bind himself, but only to charge his estate in the hands of his legal representatives,⁶³ although the rule has been held to be inapplicable to covenants which, if broken at all, are broken as soon as made.⁶⁴ Where a deed executed by the attorney in fact of the grantor shows that the property is in the grantor and that the purchase money is payable to him, and the receipt is acknowledged by the attorney in fact as such, the fact that the granting and warranting clauses purport to be the act of the attorney will not make him liable on the covenant of warranty.⁶⁵

Grantees. As one who holds under a warrantor cannot ignore the warranty,⁶⁶ where a covenant imposing burdens on the land runs with the land, see § 69 supra, the grantee of the covenantor is liable for its breach;⁶⁷ and, as stated supra § 36,

Effect of insertion of grantee's name

A wife is not liable on covenants in a deed by her and her husband from which the grantee's name was omitted when the covenant had been changed by the husband from a limited to a general one and the name of the grantee inserted by the husband during her absence and without her knowledge, although she had verbally authorized such insertion.—*Basford v. Privity of estate

A covenant will not run with the land so as to be a burden on it in the hands of a purchaser, unless there is some privity of estate between him and the covenantor.—Brewer v. Marshall, 18 N.J.Eq. 337, affirmed 19 N.J.Eq. 537, 97 Am.D. 679.

Owners of part of tract

(1) In suit for breach of deed covenant requiring grantee to maintain ditches for drainage of grantor's land, grantor is entitled to damages jointly against grantee's successors to each part of tract, where covenant covered every part of land covered by deed and amount of damage caused by each defendant cannot be segregated.—Guild v. Wallis, 40 P. 2d 737, 150 Or. 69, supplemented 41 P.2d 1119, 150 Or. 69, rehearing denied 42 P.2d 916.

(2) Where a deed to two persons contained a covenant running with the land as to payment of expenses a covenant will be enforced in equity against a grantee who purchases with notice, although it does not technically run with the land.

However, an assignee or grantee is liable only for such breaches of covenant as occur while he is the owner of the land.⁶⁸ Where a grantee covenants perpetually to maintain a division fence, he is not liable on such covenant after he has parted with his title.⁶⁹ Furthermore, a grantee of lands other than those covenanted is not in the category of an heir or devisee and is not liable for breach of the grantor's covenants.⁷⁰

Heirs and devisees. The liability of the covenantor's heirs is treated in the C.J.S. title Descent and Distribution § 126, also 18 C.J. p 950 note 41—p 951 note 60, 15 C.J. p 1262 note 51—p 1263 note 58; while in the C.J.S. title Wills § 1315, also 69 C.J. p 1219 note 77—p 1220 note 82, 15 C.J. page 1263 notes 59–62, is discussed the liability of devisees of the covenantor.

III. PERFORMANCE OR BREACH

§ 87. Obligation to Perform in General

Failure to perform a covenant is excused where performance is illegal or the covenantee prevents performance; but the occurrence of an accident or other unforeseen contingency will not excuse performance. Equities existing between the original parties do not bind a subsequent purchaser without notice.

To excuse the nonperformance of an express covenant it must be shown either that it is a covenant prohibited by law,⁷¹ or that the performance of the covenant by the covenantor has been prevented by the act of the covenantee himself;⁷² and while there is some authority to the effect that failure to perform an express covenant may be excused where its performance has become impossible by the intervention of causes which human agencies could not prevent,⁷³ upon the ground that such causes were not in contemplation of the parties provided against by the covenant,⁷⁴ yet the rule that a party who by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any inevitable accident or other contingency, applies with equal force to covenants;⁷⁵ and if a covenant be within the range of possibility it will be upheld, however absurd or improbable the idea of the execution of it may be.⁷⁶

Equities between original parties. The covenants in a deed are unaffected in the hands of an assignee by equities existing between the original parties;⁷⁷ thus a conveyance of land by the grantor for the purpose of preventing his vendor from procuring a reconveyance will not affect the title of the grantee;⁷⁸ but this rule does not apply to a remote grantee who purchases with notice of such equities.⁷⁹ It has been held that the refusal of a vendor to take upon himself the ordinary liability, as where he gives only a special warranty, although a general warranty is usual, must be regarded as sufficient, unless satisfactorily explained, to put every one of ordinary prudence upon inquiry as to the

of litigation in regard to water rights, and the two grantees partitioned the land, the covenant bound each grantee only as to the particular lands to which the fee vested wholly in him, under Civ.Code, § 1466, so that, where such expense was incurred, each was liable for his pro rata, based on lands retained. —*Miller & Lux v. source and validity of the title thus brought under suspicion,⁸⁰ and that the grantee of a quitclaim deed is not to be regarded as a bona fide purchaser without notice of outstanding equities,⁸¹ although his vendee with warranty is not affected by the vendor's implied mala fides.⁸²

§ 88. Demand of Performance in General

A demand for performance is not required for an action for breach of covenant except in some circumstances, as where the instrument requires a demand.

Notice of breach and demand of performance are not required of the covenantee in order to entitle him to an action against the covenantor upon breach of his covenant,⁸³ unless the event upon which the action accrues is mainly or exclusively within the knowledge of the covenantee,⁸⁴ or unless performance is impossible without his coöperation,⁸⁵ or unless it is fixed at an indefinite future time,⁸⁶ or unless by the terms of the instrument itself demand of performance is required.⁸⁷

§ 89. Notice to Maintain or Defend Title

A covenantee notifying his covenantor of the bringing of suit against him on an adverse claim generally need not prove, in an action on the covenant, the validity of the adverse claimant's title, unless judgment was obtained by his collusion or negligence. The covenantee may vouch the covenantor into the action in which the title is being attacked, or may bring him in to defend against a title set up against the covenantee in a suit by the latter.

Where suit is brought on an adverse claim against one who is entitled to the benefit of a covenant for title, he can, by giving proper notice of the action to the party bound by the covenant, relieve himself of the burden of proving, in a subsequent action on the covenant against the covenantor so notified, the validity of the title of the adverse claimant,⁸⁸ and this, even though the judgment was rendered upon an agreement to which the covenantor was not a party,⁸⁹ or although a valid defense might have been made to the action,⁹⁰ or although the covenantee, to save himself from eviction under the judgment, purchased the outstanding title;⁹¹ but the rule does not apply if the judgment was obtained by collusion or negligence on the part of the covenantee,⁹² or if the paramount claim was derived through the covenantee,⁹³ or subsequently to the making of the covenant.⁹⁴

The covenantor may be vouched into the action so that the covenantee may obtain full relief without instituting a subsequent action.⁹⁵ So too it has

Successive vouchers

(1) If one who has conveyed land with warranty is vouched in by his grantee he may in turn vouch in his grantor with like covenants to defend the same suit.

(2) The last vouchee may show that, notwithstanding the eviction was by title paramount to the first vouchee, yet it was not paramount to generally been held that a covenantor may be brought in to defend against a title set up against his grantee in a suit by the latter;⁹⁶ however, there is some authority to the contrary,⁹⁷ and in Louisiana plaintiff in a petitory action has no right to call his vendor in warranty,⁹⁸ although that form of proceeding seems to have been permitted in that state where no objection was made thereto.⁹⁹

§ 90. — Necessity

Notice to the covenantor of an action in which an adverse title is asserted is not essential to a right of action on the covenant; but a covenantor not receiving such notice is not concluded by the judgment against the covenantee, who must show that the eviction was under a paramount title.

While a covenantee must deal fairly and in fidelity to his covenantor,¹ and if he is sought to be illegally evicted must resist the proceeding or notify his covenantor,² yet, in the absence of statute so requiring,³ it is not essential to his right of action on the covenant that he should give his covenantor notice to come in and defend the title, when it is attacked, or that he should vouch his cove-

nantor into the action;⁴ but where no notice is given, the judgment does not conclude the covenantor and the covenantee does not make out a prima facie case by showing the judgment or decree against him and eviction thereunder; he must go further and show that the eviction was under a paramount title,⁵ at least where the covenantor was not a party to the eviction suit;⁶ and, unless such notice is given, there can be no recovery of special damages or expenses incurred in defending the suit.⁷

§ 91. — Form and Sufficiency

Notice to the covenantor of suit on an adverse claim should be unequivocal and explicit, but need not, under most authorities, be written. Some authorities require that the notice expressly call upon the covenantor to defend the action. The notice must be given in time to allow him a reasonable opportunity to prepare for the trial.

In order to conclude the covenantor, the notice given by the covenantee of the bringing of suit on an adverse claim should be unequivocal, certain, and explicit,⁸ and notice given to the covenantor's his title.—Middleton v. Thompson, 28 S.C.L. 67.

Notice of claim for improvements

The failure of the covenantee to state in the notice of pendency of action that an allowance for improvements made upon the property would be sought does not render the notice agent,⁹ or mere knowledge of suit brought to covenantor by an outside party,¹⁰ has been held insufficient, although it has been held that the covenantor's appearance in the action by attorney will be sufficient to charge him with notice of the suit.¹¹

According to some authorities the notice must expressly call upon the covenantor to appear and defend,¹² but according to others a sufficient notice is all that is required.¹³ The notice need not be in any particular form,¹⁴ nor, it is generally held, need it be in writing or of record,¹⁵ although it is doubtless the better practice to give written notice,¹⁶ and some authorities require it.¹⁷

Waiver of notice. The notice may be waived by the covenantor expressly or impliedly as by appearing and undertaking the defense,¹⁸ or by refusing to assist in remedying a defect in the title of which he was cognizant.¹⁹

Whether sufficient notice has been given is not governed by any fixed or arbitrary rule, but depends upon the facts and circumstances;²⁰ and where the notice does not appear of record the question whether it has been actually given becomes a question of fact.²¹

Time of notice. Since the object of the notice is to enable the covenantor to come in and defend his title,²² it must be given in time to afford him a reasonable opportunity not only to participate in the trial but also to prepare for it;²³ and a notice of a suit against the covenantee, given for the first time after an adverse judgment, and advising the covenantor that the covenantee is about to appeal from the judgment against him, is not sufficient to charge the covenantor with costs;²⁴ but an irregularity as to the time of service on the covenantee will not affect the sufficiency of the notice from him to his covenantor,²⁵ and plaintiff cannot be delayed by defendant's neglect to bring in his warrantor.²⁶

§ 92. — Effect on Liability

A covenantor who has been given sufficient notice of an action against his covenantee upon a ground which, if valid, would involve infringement of his covenant is bound by the judgment therein.

A covenantor who has been given sufficient notice to come in and defend an action against his covenantee brought upon a ground which, if adjudged valid, would involve infringement of his covenant is concluded by a judgment rendered therein against the covenantee in a subsequent suit brought against him by the covenantee,²⁷ and this is true notwithstanding the judgment was taken by default;²⁸ but a covenantor will not be concluded if the covenantee refuses to permit him to defend, although he will not thereby be discharged from his liability for a breach of the covenant.²⁹

Vouching in an immediate warrantor does not impair the covenantee's claim against the original warrantor on his covenant.³⁰

§ 93. Sufficiency of Performance in General

The sufficiency of performance of a covenant is determined by the parties' intent, as shown by the instrument and the circumstances of its execution. Substantial and reasonable performance is generally sufficient.

The sufficiency of the performance of a covenant is to be determined by the true intent of the parties as shown by the instrument itself, viewed in connection with the circumstances surrounding its execution.³¹ While it has been held that one who covenants to take proper means to secure the collection of a bond or mortgage is responsible that such means should be taken by every person whom he employs to execute his covenant,³² yet it may be said as a rule that a substantial and reasonable performance of the covenant is sufficient,³³ and that if either one of alternative covenants is performed there is no breach.³⁴ If the covenant is once properly performed the covenantor is absolved from liability, notwithstanding the performance may be defeated or rendered unavailing by matter subsequent,³⁵ unless the covenant is a continuing one.³⁶

A subsequent grantee does not, by accepting a deed to the premises, acknowledge the sufficiency of the covenantor's performance of his covenant.³⁷

Time of performance. Where no time is limited for the performance of the act covenanted to be done it must be performed within a reasonable time.³⁸

§ 94. Breach in General

A covenant may be broken by the falsity of alleged facts covenanted, failure to perform an act covenanted or to refrain from one covenanted against, or conduct rendering performance impossible. Performance may be waived.

A covenant may be broken by the falsity of alleged facts covenanted to be true,³⁹ by the failure to perform an act covenanted to be performed,⁴⁰ by the failure to abstain from an act covenanted against,⁴¹ or by knowingly procuring a person to

Judgment in same action

That for a time after a conveyance made in consideration of a contract to furnish home and care, no place being specified, the grantor was cared for at the grantee's home on the land conveyed, did not constitute an irrevocable election to ever afterward accept performance of the covenant at that place.—*Flinn v. Sale to negroes is not a violation of a covenant that property should not be leased to or occupied by persons other than of the white race.—Stratton v. Cornelius, 277 P. 893, 99 Cal.App. 8.

Relocation of road

Where grantor covenanted that, if road running along south line of granted land should be moved south, grantor would dedicate as a common the land between the south line of granted land and the road as thus changed, and county relocated road to the south except that part of it along south side of granted land, grantee held not entitled to claimed dedication.—*Kelly v. do acts which are a violation of the covenant.⁴² So too any voluntary act on the part of the covenantor which renders the performance of the covenant impossible will constitute a breach,⁴³ although the mere fact that a covenantor unwittingly put it out of his power to perform is not always sufficient to charge him with a breach of the covenant.⁴⁴ A previous agreement by the covenantor which if acted upon by the other party within the time limited by the agreement would operate as a breach of the covenant will not so operate when not acted upon within such time.⁴⁵

One breach of a covenant, as in the case of a covenant to maintain and repair, is not always sufficient to charge the covenantor with a total breach.⁴⁶

Failure to deliver possession is a breach of a general warranty.⁴⁷

In case of a mutual covenant the failure of either party to perform his part gives a right of action to the other.⁴⁸

Damages. The legal responsibility for the non-fulfillment of a covenant is that the party violating it must respond in damages.⁴⁹

Waiver. There may be a waiver of performance of a covenant or of a breach thereof, and no advantage can be taken of a breach which has been waived.⁵⁰ Waiver may result from circumstances as well as from express language to that effect.⁵¹

§ 95. Covenants of Title in General

An eviction is not a condition precedent to an action on a covenant of title in presenti. The usual covenants in a deed protect only against lawful claims; whether they extend to equitable, as well as legal, claims is in question.

Covenants of title in presenti, including covenants of seizin, of good right to convey, and against encumbrances, in general are broken, if at all; as soon as made, as shown supra §§ 37, 40, 41, and 42, and they can be sued on at any time without alleging an eviction or an interruption in the title,⁵² at least where possession was not delivered to the grantee.⁵³

The usual covenants in a deed are a protection against paramount, lawful claims, and are not breached by the existence of unlawful encroachments upon the land;⁵⁴ and it has been held that the usual covenants in a deed conveying the legal title are not breached by the existence of an equitable title in another,⁵⁵ although there is authority to the effect that such covenants extend to equitable as well as to legal claims.⁵⁶ A covenant by one of two administrators that the property sold belonged to him as administrator is not breached by the fact that the title was in both of such administrators.⁵⁷ Covenants of title in a deed executed by a minor are not breached until he thereafter disaffirms the deed.⁵⁸ The rule that a grantor of land with covenants of title is not liable for a failure of title subsequently occurring does not apply where the failure of title is caused by the act of the covenantor himself.⁵⁹

One entitled to compensation in the event of a failure of title may recover for a partial, as well as a total, failure.⁶⁰

Breach of a covenant of title is not excused by the refusal of the covenantee to buy in the title or to compromise with the holder of the title.⁶¹

§ 96. Covenant of Seizin

- a. In general
- b. Encumbrances
- c. Appurtenances
- d. Eviction

a. In General

The covenant of seizin is breached when made if, at the time of the conveyance, the covenantor is not seized of the very estate which his deed purports to convey; but the covenantee cannot set up as a breach a title previously existing in him, and nothing occurring after the covenant is made can constitute a breach.

In accordance with the general rule, stated in § 40, supra, that a covenant of seizin is a covenant in presenti and that it is broken, if at all, the moment it is made, a breach occurs, and a right of action immediately accrues, if the covenantor is not, at the time of the conveyance, seized of the very estate, in quantity and quality, which his deed purports to convey,⁶² as when there is outstanding an interest in the land.⁶³ Since the covenant of seizin extends only to a title existing in a third person which may defeat the estate granted,⁶⁴ the grantee of a deed with covenant of seizin cannot set up a title previously existing in him as a breach of the covenant of seizin.⁶⁵

A mere incorrect description of the land conveyed will not, as a rule, constitute a breach of the covenant of seizin if the premises can otherwise be sufficiently identified.⁶⁶

Adverse possession. It is generally held that a possession adverse to the grantor at the time of his conveyance is a breach of his covenant of seizin,⁶⁷ whether the adverse possession is rightful or wrongful;⁶⁸ but since, as discussed in Adverse

Deficiency in acreage

Vendee's cause of action against vendor for value of alleged deficiency in acreage was for breach of covenant of seizin, and accrued immediately upon delivery and acceptance of deed executed by vendor to him.—Pace v. Watson, Tenn.App., 126 S.W.2d 404.

Possession of the land by a third person at the date of the conveyance is prima facie evidence of title in him which could not be overcome by proof of the grantor that his title was paramount.—Prestwood v. McGowan, 41 So. 779, 148 Ala. 475.

68. Colo.—Thomas v. Dunnean, 225 P. 253, 75 Colo. 216.

Possession § 55, an essential ingredient of adverse possession is a claim of right hostile to the true owner, the covenant is not broken by the fact that the land is then occupied by a tenant of the covenantor with the knowledge of the covenantee,⁶⁹ or by the fact that the premises were in the possession of another who merely claimed under a mistaken idea as to boundaries.⁷⁰

Subsequent outstanding interest. Since the covenant, if breached at all, is breached when made, nothing that occurs thereafter to defeat the title can constitute a breach of the covenant.⁷¹ Thus neither the setting aside of a foreclosure sale under which the covenantor acquired title⁷² nor a subsequent conveyance of the land by the covenantor's grantor⁷³ will breach the covenant.

Where the covenantor perfects his title before the commencement of suit on the covenant,⁷⁴ as where the outstanding interest in the land is destroyed by adverse possession before such commencement,⁷⁵ there is no breach of the covenant of seizin, if the grantees have not been either actually or constructively evicted.⁷⁶

Conveyance by covenantee. It is a good defense to an action for breach of a covenant of seizin that the covenantee had disabled himself from reconveying to his grantor by conveying the land to a third person,⁷⁷ although the covenantor has been held to derive no equity from a sale by the covenantee where the difference between the purchase price received by the covenantee and that received by the covenantor exceeded the amount sued for.⁷⁸ On the other hand, it has been held that a grantee's right to recover for a breach of the covenant of seizin is not defeated by the foreclosure of a mortgage given or assumed by him, and his consequent loss of the property.⁷⁹

b. Encumbrances

The covenant of seizin is not broken by the existence of an encumbrance or easement not affecting the technical seizin. Authorities conflict as to whether it is breached by the existence of an outstanding lease, a tax claim, or a street or highway on the land.

It is a general rule that the covenant of seizin is not broken by the existence of an encumbrance or easement which does not affect the technical seizin of the covenantee,⁸⁰ as, for example, an inchoate or contingent right of dower,⁸¹ an outstanding judgment against the covenantor,⁸² a mortgage,⁸³ a railroad right of way,⁸⁴ or a right to erect a wall on the granted premises.⁸⁵

71. N.Y.—Coit v. McReynolds, 25 N.Y.Super. 655.

Tax deed

(1) A tax deed executed after a conveyance containing a covenant of seizin did not constitute a breach of the covenant of seizin, even though the tax deed was based upon a tax certificate which existed at the time of the transfer; the tax certificate prior to its ripening into a deed was simply a lien on the property.—Zerfing v. Seelig, 85 N.W. 585, 14 S.D. 303, affirming 80 N.W. 140, 12 S.D. 25.

(2) However, it has been held that such a deed, when recorded, was an eviction of the grantee if the land was vacant and unoccupied, entitling the grantee to sue for breach of the covenant of seizin.—Daggett v. Reas, 48 N.W. 127, 79 Wis. 60.

Estate subject to divestment

Grantee whose predecessor's title was to be divested on certain contingency was held not entitled to relief under covenants of seizin, there being no outstanding title or claim then existing.—Millison v. Drake, 175 N.E. 34, 37 Ohio App. 559, affirmed 174 N.E. 776, 123 Ohio St. 249.

72. N.Y.—Coit v. McReynolds, 25 N.Y.Super. 655.

Possible attack by mortgagor's heirs

Where a purchaser accepts a deed from a vendor who acquired title through a mortgage foreclosure sale, the fact that the title may be subject to attack by heirs of the mortgagor is not sufficient to authorize judgment for breach of covenant of seizin when it appears that the existence of such heirs is uncertain.—Zarkowski v. Schroeder, 75 N.Y.S. 1021, 71 App.Div. 526.

Threat of potential lien does not constitute breach of covenant of seizin.—Deschenes v. Tallman, 161 N.E. 321, 248 N.Y. 33, reversing 225 N.Y.S. 815, 222 App.Div. 761.

But it has been said, as dictum, that "an outstanding right of dower . . . according to most authorities is . . . covered by covenants of seizin."—Kreinbring v. Mathews, 159 P. 75, 77, 81 Or. 243.

Street or highway. Although there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁶ it is generally held that a covenant of seizin is not breached by the existence of a street or highway on the land,⁸⁷ especially if the covenantee is chargeable with notice of its existence.⁸⁸

Outstanding lease. It has been held that the covenant is not broken by the existence of a prior lease on the land,⁸⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁰

Tax claims. An outstanding tax certificate has been held not to be a breach of the covenant of seizin even though it ripened into a deed after the covenant was given.⁹¹ On the other hand, it has been held that the covenant is breached by the existence of a tax claim which the grantee is compelled to pay.⁹²

c. Appurtenances

The covenant of seizin is breached by a failure of title to anything properly appurtenant to the land conveyed, including an appurtenant right.

There is a breach of the covenant of seizin where there is a failure of title to anything properly ap-

purtenant to the land conveyed, as, for example, plumbers' fixtures,⁹³ fences,⁹⁴ or standing timber;⁹⁵ and it has been held that the covenant was breached where a third person had title to a spring on the premises with the right to convey the water away by means of an aqueduct.⁹⁶ So too the covenant is breached by failure of title to any appurtenant right purported to be conveyed, such as the right to raise a milldam.⁹⁷

On the other hand, the unlawful removal by a tenant of buildings erected by him is not a breach of the landlord's covenant of seizin;⁹⁸ and the fact that a building on the premises encroaches on adjoining land is not a breach of the covenant of seizin.⁹⁹ Title deeds to land are not appurtenant thereto so as to render the grantor liable on his covenant of seizin for failing to deliver them to the grantee.¹

An actual eviction is generally not essential to a breach of the covenant of seizin, except, under some authorities, where possession attended the deed.

Generally, an actual eviction is not essential to a breach of the covenant of seizin,² and the absence of an eviction does not limit recovery to nominal damages;³ however, there is authority that when possession attended the deed actual or constructive eviction is necessary.⁴

Damage resulting from existence of outstanding title is sufficient without an eviction to constitute a breach of the covenant of seizin.—Jones v. Hazeltine, 102 S.W. 40, 124 Mo.App. 674.

Purchase of outstanding paramount title by the grantee is equivalent to an eviction.—Brooks v. Mohl, 116 N.W. 981, 104 Minn. 404, 124 Am.S.R. 629, 17 L.R.A., N.S., 1195—15 C.J. p 1270 note 9.

The covenant is not broken when the grantee voluntarily surrenders possession to one not having the paramount title,⁵ as to the purchaser at a tax sale while the right of redemption remains.⁶

§ 97. Covenant of Right to Convey

A covenant of good right to convey is broken where the covenantor does not have the title contemplated by the covenant, but not by the existence of encumbrances not affecting the seizin. An actual eviction is not necessary to consummate a breach.

Since, as stated supra § 40 the covenant of good right to convey is held to be equivalent to the covenant of seizin, the general rules stated in § 96 supra with reference to the covenant of seizin apply to the covenant of right to convey. In accordance with the usually recognized rule, stated in § 41, supra, that the covenant is a covenant in presenti, and, if broken, is broken, when made, in general there is a breach where, at that time, the covenantor does not have the title contemplated by the covenant,⁷ as, for example, where the covenantor has no title,⁸ or where there is outstanding an estate in remainder;⁹ and the covenant has been held to be breached by the existence of a tax claim which the grantee was compelled to pay.¹⁰ It is not broken by a technical error in the description of the premises,¹¹ or by the existence of a public highway over the land conveyed,¹² or of an inchoate right of dower,¹³ or of an outstanding mortgage,¹⁴ or by the fact that the grantor had a voidable title.¹⁵

An actual eviction is unnecessary to consummate the breach,¹⁶ unless, as held in some cases, possession accompanied the deed.¹⁷

§ 98. Covenant against Encumbrances

A covenant against encumbrances is regarded as broken, generally without respect to actual eviction, if at the time the covenant is made there exists an outstanding adverse right, title, or interest which the law will recognize and protect, and if such encumbrance is within the scope of the covenant and its removal not expressly or impliedly assumed by the grantee.

As appears in § 42 supra, while the covenant against encumbrances has sometimes been regarded, in effect, as one of indemnity, it is ordinarily considered to be a covenant in presenti, which if not true is broken as soon as made. Accordingly, a breach of the covenant has occurred if there exists at the time of the conveyance an outstanding adverse title, charge, burden, or interest constituting an encumbrance¹⁸ within the meaning of the

Encumbrances of "public record"

(1) Under statute permitting recovery against remote grantor for encumbrance appearing from a "public record," suit for breach of covenant can be maintained for encumbrance disclosed by records of probate court.—Dyer v. Scott, 149 N.E. 146, 253 Mass. 480.

(2) Under the former wording of the statute, requiring the encumbrance to appear "of record," it was held that a breach of covenant occurred only where the encumbrance appeared of record in the registry of deeds, and that a lien for unpaid taxes which appeared only in the records of a city or town was not sufficient to come within the statute.—Carter v. Peak, 138 Mass. 439.

term as discussed generally in § 42 supra, such as an outstanding estate in remainder in a third person,¹⁹ or the encroachment on adjoining land of a building on the land conveyed.²⁰

On the other hand, such a covenant is not breached if there does not exist at the time of the conveyance an outstanding right, title, or interest which the law will recognize and protect,²¹ and hence the covenant is not broken by the existence of an invalid claim or demand against the property,²² or by the existence in another of a mere possibility of establishing a right to or an interest in the land.²³ So the grantee cannot recover damages for removing an alleged encumbrance where the grantor had in any case gained full title to the property by prescription.²⁴ Also, such a covenant has no reference to obvious and physical burdens on the land, which are permanent in character;²⁵ and a claim for breach of covenant cannot be predicated on the condition of the premises as to dilapidation or the existence of a nuisance or the necessity of repair or alteration to conform to building laws.²⁶

Generally, the covenant may be enforced only where the encumbrance derogates from the title which the covenantor agreed to convey, and it does not apply to liens created by intermediate parties,²⁷ or to encumbrances placed on the premises by the grantee himself.²⁸

Exceptions from covenant; assumption by grantee. The covenant against encumbrances does not extend to an encumbrance which the covenantee has either expressly or impliedly excepted therefrom and assumed to remove;²⁹ and it has been held that

Breach of contract

That grantee in subsequently selling land breached contract to furnish abstract showing title free from material defect does not necessarily show breach of covenant in deed to him that title was unencumbered.—Smith v. McKelvey, 162 N.E. 722, 28 Ohio App. 361.

Effect of existence of older encumbrance

The existence of an older unpaid encumbrance is no defense to an action on a covenant against encumbrances on account of a junior encumbrance paid off by the covenantee.—Dehority v. Wright, 101 Ind. 382.

Failure of grantee to perform collateral agreement

In an action for breach of an implied covenant against encumbrances, the fact that plaintiff failed to perform his agreement as to the satisfaction of a deficiency judgment against one defendant is immaterial, where no damage was suffered thereby.—Holzheier v. Hayes, 65 P. 968, 133 Cal. 458.

Custom contrary to terms of covenant

A custom that, where a person sold realty with a condition that a certificate of title would be furnished to the purchaser and, if the title was defective, the purchaser must bear the burden of the error is no defense to an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrances.—Sondag v. Keefe, 251 Ill.App. 378.

Resale of property by grantee

In action for breach of covenant against encumbrance, that plaintiff resold property at profit is no defense.—Carney v. Morrison, 228 N.Y. S. 308, 223 App.Div. 244, motion granted 164 N.E. 565, 249 N.Y. 511.

(2) Where mortgage is excepted from covenant, no encumbrance results from proceedings to foreclose

the assumption of an encumbrance by a covenantee may be by parol,³⁰ although other authority holds that the legal effect of a covenant cannot be destroyed by a parol contemporaneous agreement.³¹

An assumption by the covenantee may be shown by an agreement to take the deed subject to the encumbrance as part of the consideration for the land,³² by an express exclusion of the encumbrance from the operation of the covenant,³³ by the receipt from the covenantor of money wherewith to discharge the encumbrance,³⁴ or by a reconveyance in trust or by mortgage with full covenants.³⁵ Where, however, the assumption is limited to an amount smaller than the encumbrance, the covenant against encumbrances is broken to the extent of the excess.³⁶

Eviction. While it has been broadly stated in some cases that the covenant against encumbrances is not broken until actual eviction,³⁷ at least where the breach is claimed merely by reason of a restriction resting on the land,³⁸ or according to some authorities until the grantee has been evicted or has removed the encumbrance,³⁹ and while it appears from § 145 infra that, where there has been no eviction either actual or constructive, only nominal damages can be recovered, the general rule is that an actual eviction is not necessary to a right of action for a breach of this covenant,⁴⁰ especially where the land is wild and unimproved.⁴¹ The purchaser may on satisfying the outstanding encumbrance resort to his action against the covenantor;⁴² and, although it has been said that satisfaction of the encumbrance is a condition precedent to the right of recovery except in case of an absolute covenant by the grantor to satisfy the encumbrance, see infra § 117, it has also been held that he is not deprived of the right to recover on the covenant because he has not been able to redeem the land by paying off the encumbrances where he has exhausted his defenses in the courts.⁴³

§ 99. — Attachments

Covenant against encumbrances is ordinarily broken by the existence of an attachment on the land.

An attachment resting on land prior to a deed is generally considered an encumbrance within the meaning of a covenant against encumbrances,⁴⁴ especially when followed by a levy of execution.⁴⁵

§ 100. — Dower

An inchoate right of dower in the land conveyed is generally held an encumbrance, although some authorities hold that no breach occurs until the amount thereof has been ascertained.

It has generally been held that the covenant against encumbrances is broken by the existence of an inchoate right of dower in the land conveyed,⁴⁶ although the rule does not seem to be of universal application,⁴⁷ it being held, for example, that no breach occurs where there are other lands of the grantor on which the dower interest could take effect.⁴⁸ According to some authorities a covenant against encumbrances is not considered as broken by the existence of a right of dower until it has been ascertained,⁴⁹ although it is conceded that a technical breach may have occurred at the time of making the covenant.⁵⁰

§ 101. — Easements

- a. In general
- b. Water rights

a. In General

As a general rule, the covenant against encumbrances is considered broken by the existence of an outstanding easement diminishing the value of the property, such as a private right of way or a railroad right of way, but it is disputed whether a public highway over the land constitutes a breach.

Except when acquired through exercise of the power of eminent domain,⁵¹ or by act of congress or a state legislature,⁵² the covenant against encumbrances is generally held to be broken by the existence of any outstanding easement which diminishes the value of the land conveyed,⁵³ and it appears from § 39 supra that, with certain limitations as to open, notorious easements, the grantee's knowledge of the existence of the easement makes no difference.

On the other hand, where the right is merely an inconvenience, inseparable from the nature of the estate,⁵⁴ or where it is part of a beneficial improvement on the land,⁵⁵ it is not within the meaning of the covenant. A parol license to enter on land for a specific purpose is not an encumbrance;⁵⁶ nor is the easement of an existing drainage ditch an encumbrance since its existence must have been within the contemplation of the parties.⁵⁷

(2) So, also, where a vacant lot supports the half of the wall of the building erected on an adjoining lot, and a purchaser of the vacant lot is bound by the terms of a party-wall agreement entered into between his grantor and the adjoining owner to pay half of the cost of such wall in order to use the same, it is held that the purchaser may sue for a breach of the covenant against encumbrances.

Neb.—Burr v. Lamaster, 46 N.W. 1015, 30 Neb. 688, 27 Am.S.R. 423, 9 L.R.A. 637.

(3) However, where statute gives the right to rest half of the wall on the contiguous lot and requires the owner of the vacant lot to pay his proportionate share of the expense of the wall before he enters on its enjoyment, the purchaser of the vacant lot cannot maintain an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrances.—Bertram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa 46.

Public highways. The question whether the existence of a public highway over land constitutes a breach of the covenant against encumbrances in a conveyance of the land is one on which there is conflict of judicial opinion. According to some authorities such a highway constitutes a breach,⁵⁸ while many others contend that, since its existence must have been in contemplation of the parties when the deed was made, a public highway over land does not constitute a breach of the covenant,⁵⁹ especially where the deed refers to a plat on which the highway is shown.⁶⁰ Still other authorities distinguish between urban and rural land and hold that the easement of a public highway constitutes an encumbrance in the case of city property but not in the case of rural property.⁶¹

Private ways. The existence in a private person of a right of way over granted premises at the time of the conveyance is ordinarily considered a breach of the covenant against encumbrances,⁶² and, as is stated in § 39 supra, the grantee's knowledge of the existence of such a way does not protect the grantor from his covenant. Under some circumstances, however, the existence of a right of way may not constitute a breach of covenant justifying recovery of damages.⁶³

So the grantor's covenant that he had not done anything to encumber the property is not broken by a right of way which came into existence prior to the time the grantor acquired title.⁶⁴

Railroad rights of way. The existence of a railroad right of way over the land conveyed is a breach of the covenant against encumbrances in the deed of conveyance;⁶⁵ it appears, however, from § 39 supra that there is a conflict of opinion as to whether this rule is changed by the grantee's knowledge of the existence of such right of way. It has also been held that a covenant against enfirmed on other grounds 60 A. 210, 68 N.J.Eq. 656.

The reason for the rule is "the fact that the road, although admittedly an incumbrance, and possibly an injury to the property, was there when the purchaser bought, and he is presumed to have had knowledge of it. In such and in similar cases there is the further presumption that if the incumbrance is really an injury, such injury was in the contemplation of the parties, and that the price was regulated accordingly."—Mummert v. McKeen, 4 A. 542, 112 Pa. 315, 320—15 C.J. p 1276 note 99 [a].

An exception to the text rule is recognized where by mistake of the parties property conveyed as abutting the road actually encroaches thereon, since in such case the parties cannot be said to have contemplated the existence of the easement on the property.

Way of necessity

(1) It has been held that a covenant against encumbrances is not broken by a conveyance burdened with an implied reservation of a way of necessity to afford another reasonable access to his land, since the grantee takes subject thereto.—Reed v. Blum, 183 N.W. 766, 215 Mich. 247.

cumbrances in a deed of land conveying no part of the adjacent streets is breached by a release previously executed by the grantor releasing a railway from liability for damages resulting to the land from its operation on an adjacent street;⁶⁶ but the mere use of a way by a railroad company does not show a right thereto, and raises no presumption of the existence of an encumbrance.⁶⁷

b. Water Rights

With some exceptions, the existence of outstanding water rights preventing the grantee's full enjoyment of the premises conveyed constitutes a breach of covenant against encumbrances.

The existence of outstanding water rights which prevent a grantee's full enjoyment of the premises conveyed is as a rule a breach of the covenant against encumbrances in the deed of conveyance,⁶⁸ although a parol license by a covenantor to flow lands by a dam is not a breach of his covenant against encumbrances.⁶⁹ In applying the general rule, however, it must be remembered that the precise measure of the covenantee's rights are governed by the grant and the covenants of the grantor,⁷⁰ and, while the law will make all necessary implications to prevent the grantor from derogating from his own grant, it will reciprocally and equally make like implications to prevent the grantor from being shorn of his just rights in reference to property which he retains.⁷¹

Also, since the right of a proprietor to the flow and fall of water on his own land is not an easement, but is inseparably connected with, and inherent in, the land, the flow of such stream over the land conveyed,⁷² or the exercise of the right to its flow below certain granted premises in accordance with a previous appropriation,⁷³ is not an encumbrance; nor is the exercise of the right to have a natural stream flow freely over the land of a lower proprietor an encumbrance on the land below.⁷⁴

§ 102. — Judgments

The covenant against encumbrances is generally breached by an outstanding judgment against the grantor at the time of the conveyance.

An outstanding judgment against the grantor at the time of the conveyance of land is a breach of the covenant against encumbrances,⁷⁵ and, where the encumbrance is a judgment for dower which has been assigned in the form of an annuity charged on the land, the covenantee can maintain an action on the covenant against encumbrances on the payment by him of each installment.⁷⁶ Of course, the covenant is not broken by a judgment not constituting a lien against the property conveyed.⁷⁷

§ 103. — Leases

Generally the covenant against encumbrances is breached by a valid outstanding lease on the property conveyed.

Water flow from dam

A covenant against encumbrances is not breached by the fact that the grantor prior to the conveyance caused water to flow on the land by means of a dam which he had a right to build.—Kidder v. George, 18 N.H. 511.

Reservation of privileges

Lien against life estate only

Where owner of life estate in certain land, against which there were existing judgment liens, had executed a deed conveying fee in land with covenant against encumbrances and later joined owner of remainder in executing a like deed to same grantee, remainderman was not liable to grantee for breach of covenant against encumbrances for amount expended by grantee in discharging judgment liens against life estate, since life tenant's interest was conveyed to grantee by first deed and inclusion of her name in second deed was surplusage.—Thompson v. Avery County, 5 S.E.2d 146, 216 N.C. 405.

A valid outstanding lease is an encumbrance, within the meaning of the covenant against encumbrances in a deed of conveyance of the land,⁷⁸ unless the grantee at time of the conveyance takes an assignment of the lease,⁷⁹ or accepts the benefits thereof;⁸⁰ and it seems that a covenant for the future renewal of a lease is not such a present demise as will constitute an encumbrance on the land in the hands of a third person after the first term has been surrendered by agreement.⁸¹

§ 104. — Liens in General

A valid subsisting lien on the land conveyed is ordinarily a breach of the covenant against encumbrances.

If a lien on the land conveyed is a valid and subsisting one at the time the covenant is made,⁸² it constitutes a breach of the covenant against encumbrances,⁸³ unless the lien was one for which the grantee was primarily liable before he received a conveyance of the premises.⁸⁴

§ 105. — Mortgages

Generally the covenant against encumbrances is broken immediately where there is a valid outstanding mortgage on the premises conveyed.

As a rule the covenant against encumbrances is broken immediately, where there is an outstanding mortgage on the premises conveyed;⁸⁵ and the rule applies to the statutory covenant implied by use of the words "grant, bargain and sell."⁸⁶ Also, the covenant is broken by the existence of a statutory right of redemption.⁸⁷

It has been held, however, that no action lies for substantial damages by reason of the mortgage in advance of an eviction or until the owner of the land pays off the encumbrance, see infra § 117; and a covenant against encumbrances cannot be enforced where the outstanding mortgage is conclusively shown not to be a valid and subsisting lien,⁸⁸ or where the mortgage was created by the grantee himself,⁸⁹ or where he has obtained the mortgagor's right of redemption,⁹⁰ or a release of the mortgagor's right to redeem after such right is barred by limitation.⁹¹ Also, as appears supra § 98, such a covenant cannot be enforced where the mortgage encumbrance was excepted from the covenant and assumed by the covenantee. In case of the statutory covenant implied by the use of the words "grant, bargain and sell," the mortgage encumbrance must have been done or suffered by the grantor or some person claiming under him.⁹²

It has been held that an irregularity in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage cannot be shown in defense to an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrances by reason of such mortgage, the covenantee not being a party to the proceedings.⁹³

§ 106. — Taxes

As a general rule, unpaid taxes or special assessments which under the controlling statutory provisions constitute a valid and subsisting lien on land at the time of its conveyance, or valid outstanding tax titles, constitute a breach of covenant against encumbrances.

While a covenant against encumbrances is not broken by a claim on account of taxes which is improper or invalid,⁹⁴ or which does not become a lien on the land prior to the conveyance,⁹⁵ yet unpaid taxes constituting a valid and subsisting lien on land at the time of its conveyance constitute a breach of the covenant,⁹⁶ which is not excused by the covenantor's agreement to pay the tax;⁹⁷ and notwithstanding a personal liability also rests on the covenantor,⁹⁸ although it has been held that taxes are not an encumbrance on land granted within the meaning of a covenant against encumbrances in the grant, where the grantor has other estate from which the tax could be collected.⁹⁹

It has also been held that taxes assessed after a contract of sale but before the execution of the deed are within the covenant against encumbrances contained in the deed,¹ unless otherwise controlled by an agreement between the parties;² but it has been held that taxes assessed after contract of sale which the purchaser permits to remain unpaid do not constitute an encumbrance done or suffered by the vendor under the covenant implied from the statutory form of deed.³ A former owner of land is not liable on his covenant against encumbrances to a remote grantee for the personal taxes of such grantee which were included with the realty tax of his grantor on which the land was sold at tax sale and redeemed by the last grantee.⁴ The covenant against encumbrances implied from the word "grant" is not breached by outstanding taxes which were a lien on the land at the time of its conveyance but not payable until afterward, unless the grantor was under personal obligation to discharge the lien.⁵

No taxes due

Special assessments. Unless otherwise provided by statute,⁶ and subject to statutory regulations as to the time when the lien attaches, and subject also to the general rule that local assessments are not included in a covenant against taxes,⁷ valid special assessments which constitute a lien on land at the time of its conveyance are within the meaning of a covenant against encumbrances.⁸ In some jurisdictions this rule applies to reassessments when the original assessment has been declared invalid,⁹ but in others it is held that the reassessment does not relate back to the date of the original levy so as to constitute an encumbrance.¹⁰

On the other hand, while it has been indicated that an encumbrance may arise from a tax claim notwithstanding no lien for the claim has yet been established,¹¹ it is generally held that a special assessment not becoming a lien until after the date of the conveyance does not breach a covenant against encumbrances.¹² An assessment of benefit from a street widening is held to be a breach of the covenant against encumbrances in a deed of the assessed premises afterward executed, although the grantor at the time of the conveyance had only constructive notice of the widening.¹³

A conveyance of a portion of a lot which is subject to the lien of a special assessment, containing a covenant that the property conveyed is free from encumbrances, discloses the intention on the part of the parties to the conveyance that the grantor is to assume the whole burden of such lien on the portion retained by him, while the grantee is to take and hold his portion entirely free from the burden of the lien.¹⁴

When lien attaches. The circumstances under which a tax or special assessment lien attaches, so as to render a grantor liable on his covenant against encumbrances, are to be determined in accordance with the controlling statutory provisions,¹⁵ and

Covenant implied from statutory form of grant

(1) Text rule generally applies.—Cheatham v. Palmer, 167 S.E. 522, 176 Ga. 227.

(2) Covenant implied by the words "grant, bargain, sell," having, under statute, the effect of a warranty against encumbrances done or suffered by the grantor, covers a local assessment against the property while owned and in possession of the grantor; but such a covenant in mortgagee's foreclosure deed does not cover lien for taxes assessed against mortgagor in possession.—Dothan Nat. Bank v. Hollis, 103 So. 589, 212 Ala. 628.

district's indebtedness is not "encumbrance" within covenant, and would not become encumbrance until district levied assessment to pay debt.—Van Hollebeke v. Wheeler, 41 P.2d 603, 55 Idaho 268.

Intention of parties

Notwithstanding that unmatured installments of a special drainage assessment was admitted to be a lien on the land, it was held that the covenant extended only to such installments as were due and payable at the time of the conveyance where it was not intended by the parties that the grantor be liable for installments not yet due.—Duke v. Maness, 2 Tenn.App. 267.

while, as a general rule, the lien must have attached prior to the time of the conveyance, see supra and infra this section, it has been held that it need not be actionable at the time of the conveyance.¹⁸ Other authority holds that, in the absence of contrary statute, the lien attaches when the amount of taxes is definitely fixed, and liability for its payment commences.¹⁷

Tax titles. It has been held that the covenant against encumbrances is breached by an outstanding tax deed to the property conveyed, although the tax sale was invalid;¹⁸ but it has also been held that an illegal sale for taxes is not a breach of the covenant against encumbrances.¹⁹ At any rate, a valid certificate of the sale of land for taxes held by a third person at the time a warranty deed is given is a breach of the covenant against encumbrances,²⁰ although it has been held that this rule does not apply to a remote grantee of an equity of redemption with covenants against encumbrances, who acquires title through foreclosure of the original trust instrument.²¹

§ 107. — Restrictions as to Use of Property

Generally restrictions and obligations as to the use

Existence of improvement bonds at time of conveyance does not breach covenant against encumbrances since no lien is created until assessment is levied to pay amount due on bonds.—Hobson v. Beall, 279 P. 645, 130 Or. 240.

Unmatured charges

Some assessments are regarded as a public charge running solely against the land and do not become a lien until maturity of the prescribed amount falling due each year. Ark.—Blakemore v. Covey, 293 S.W. 39, 173 Ark. 722. N.C.—Branch v. Saunders, 141 S.E. 583, 195 N.C. 176—Paite v. Banks, 100 S.E. 251, 173 N.C. 139. Or.—Hobson v. Beall, 279 P. 645, 130 Or. 240.

Construction prior to assessment

(1) Ordinarily, lien attaches from date assessment is made and not from date construction of improvement is commenced and covenant entered into after latter date but before former date is not breached.—Tomes v. Thompson, 151 A. 531, 112 Conn. 190, 72 A.L.R. 297.

(2) Especially is this true where the statute authorizing the improvement fixes the lien as of such time.—Bailey v. Levy, 104 So. 415, 213 Ala. 80.

(3) According to other authority, however, where the improvement has been made at the time of agreement to convey land benefited thereby, the fact that the assessment was not actually made until after the deed will not relieve the grantor of liability for the assessment.

La.—Louisiana Impr. Co. v. Machece, 3 La.A., Orleans, 71.

Assessment payable in installments

Where special assessment had been levied against property, and was an encumbrance on land at time of transfer, grantor was obliged to pay such taxes, although they were payable in annual installments, some of which were not due and payable at time of transfer of property.—Bean v. Munger Land Co., Mo.App., 265 S.W. 844.

Amount not yet ascertained

Where it was shown that the improvements had been ordered made but the amount due was not declared at the time of the making of the deed, it is the general rule that such taxes are a lien regardless of the fact that the exact amount is not yet ascertained.—Vaughan v. Vaughan, 6 Tenn.App. 354.

Mo.—Bean v. Munger Land Co., App., 265 S.W. 844.

of the property conveyed constitute a breach of covenant against encumbrances.

A covenant against encumbrances is broken where the grantor was validly restricted in or had assumed obligations as to the use of the property conveyed,²² unless the right so restricted did not pass as an appurtenance to the land granted;²³ and it has been held that the rule does not apply where the restrictions are not confined to any particular trade or business, but only to such business as may prove a nuisance.²⁴

§ 108. Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment

- a. General considerations
- b. Sufficiency of eviction or disturbance of possession in general
- c. Particular adverse claims or encumbrances

a. General Considerations

In general there is no breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment unless and until there has been an eviction, or at least some disturbance of the possession, of the person entitled to the benefit of the covenant, by virtue of a paramount and lawful title or right existing when the covenant was made.

As a general rule the covenant for quiet enjoyment operates prospectively or in futuro, but applies only to acts of persons claiming under a title existing when the covenant was made, as shown supra § 45. The covenant is broken only when quiet enjoyment is disturbed;²⁵ as more specifically stated, there is no breach unless and until there has been an eviction,²⁶ actual or constructive,²⁷ or at least some disturbance of possession,²⁸ by virtue of a paramount title or right.²⁹ The mere existence of an outstanding, paramount title does not in general constitute a breach,³⁰ some hostile assertion of the adverse title usually being necessary;³¹ accordingly as a general rule, if the covenantee, enters and remains in undisturbed possession, the covenant is not breached by the mere fact that the title is in a third person.³² The assertion by the United States of its paramount title to the property, however, apparently may be sufficient to effect a breach.³³

It has frequently been held or recognized that failure or inability of the covenantee or grantee to obtain possession because of an outstanding, paramount title is within the meaning and effect of the covenant,³⁴ and that the covenantee is not required to bring suit to obtain possession;³⁵ in such case the breach occurs when the covenant is made,³⁶ the case being an exception to, or qualification of, the general rule that the covenant operates prospectively or in futuro.³⁷

Possession in grantor

Grantor's predecessors having paid taxes on wild lands for seven years next preceding date of deed, possession rested in grantor when deed was delivered, so that his covenant for quiet enjoyment was not broken until grantee's possession was disturbed.—Smith v. Cancellation of entry

There was a breach where the government asserted its title to the land by lawfully canceling an entry theretofore made thereon by the person through whom the covenantor claimed title, notwithstanding the covenantee was given a preference right to file on the land, and subsequently did file thereon.—Efta v. Grantor not in possession

37. Ala.—Musgrove v. Cordova Coal, etc., Co., 67 So. 582, 191 Ala. 419.

an action for the breach of an absolute or unlimited covenant for quiet enjoyment can be sustained only where the person claiming its benefit has been prevented from taking possession, or has been evicted, by a person having a lawful and paramount title existing at the time the covenant was made;³⁸ and to constitute a breach of a full and absolute covenant for quiet enjoyment against all persons, there must in general be a union of acts of disturbance and lawful title.³⁹

Covenantee in possession when covenant made. One who accepts a deed with a covenant for quiet enjoyment cannot allege that the covenant is broken because he himself is in possession at the time.⁴⁰

Acts of trespassers. In view of the general rule hereinbefore stated that, to constitute a breach, there must be a union of acts of disturbance and lawful title, as a general rule a disturbance or entry by a mere intruder is not sufficient to constitute a breach;⁴¹ nor is the covenant broken by the fact that, in a suit by the covenantee against an intruder, the grantor did not furnish the covenantee with the title deeds to the premises.⁴² The general rule does not apply, however, where particular persons are named, against whose acts the grantor covenants, and such covenant applies to disturbance by such persons whether or not under paramount and lawful title.⁴³

Acts or omissions of covenantor. The covenant for quiet enjoyment extends to all acts of the covenantor, whether tortious or not, if committed under color of title.⁴⁴ While the scope of the covenant in respect of the acts of a covenantor which will constitute a breach has been stated in rather broad terms,⁴⁵ in this connection a distinction has been made between a mere trespass by the covenantor and an entry to the exclusion of the grantee or covenantee.⁴⁶ It has been held that there is not a breach where the covenantor does not assert title or right of possession through or under anyone other than the covenantee.⁴⁷ A covenant for quiet enjoyment in a grant of a railroad right of way over, across, through, or upon any land owned by the grantor is not breached by the recovery of damages by the grantor from the grantee for the maintenance of a right of way which was not incident to the right of way granted.⁴⁸

b. Sufficiency of Eviction or Disturbance of Possession in General

While there have been holdings or expressions to the effect that actual eviction is an essential element of the breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the rule now quite generally recognized is that any actual disturbance of the possession equivalent to an eviction by one having the necessary title is sufficient.

The cases are not entirely harmonious as to whether actual eviction, which occurs when the grantee is dispossessed by process of law,⁴⁹ is a necessary element of breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. According to some cases, especially earlier ones, actual eviction is necessary,⁵⁰ but, according to the rule now quite generally recognized, even in various jurisdictions in which formerly actual eviction was regarded as, or said to be, necessary,⁵¹ any actual disturbance of the possession equivalent to an eviction by one having the required lawful and paramount title is a breach of the covenant;⁵² and, according to many authorities, a covenantee may voluntarily surrender possession to

"The principle which requires the eviction or disturbance to be by one claiming under a superior title to constitute a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment is subject to certain well-settled exceptions, among which is that the covenant extends to all acts of the covenantor himself whether tortious or otherwise."—Atler v. Erskine, 111 S.W. 186, 50 Tex. Civ.App. 576.

one having paramount title and then maintain his action for breach of the covenant.⁵³ The rule frequently recognized, and stated in the preceding subdivision of this section, that failure or inability of the grantee or covenantee to obtain possession because of an outstanding, paramount title is within the meaning and effect of the covenant has sometimes been regarded as based on the theory that such failure or inability is a constructive eviction.⁵⁴

In general, if the covenantee enters and remains in undisturbed possession, the covenant is not breached by the mere fact that the title is in a third person, as shown in the preceding subdivision of this section; there is neither actual nor constructive eviction justifying a claim of covenant broken where the grantee continues in possession,⁵⁵ unless, it seems, while continuing in physical possession, he submits by attornment to a claim of title paramount.⁵⁶

Mere threats to take legal proceedings against the covenantee, in respect of his possession of the property, do not constitute duress operating as a breach of covenant.⁵⁷

c. Particular Adverse Claims or Encumbrances

A breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment may result from the existence and maintenance of the adverse claim of a lessee, mortgagee, one to whom dower has been assigned, the holder of an easement, a cotenant, or a remainderman.

The view has been expressed that, because an unexpired lease prevents the grantee from obtaining possession, the existence of such a lease effects a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment.⁵⁸ It has been held that there is a breach of a covenant for delivery of possession to grantee on a certain date subsequent to the date of conveyance where the grantor after the date of conveyance leases the property to a third person for a period extending beyond the date for delivery of possession to the grantee.⁵⁹ The covenant is not breached where the claim is that of the grantor or covenantor under a lease to him of part of the premises, made by the grantee or covenantee after the conveyance was made.⁶⁰ Questions as to the effect of the knowledge of the covenantee of the existence of a lease on the operative effect of various covenants are considered in certain aspects supra § 39.

Mortgage. Eviction, or the equivalent, of the grantee or covenantee under a mortgage existing when the conveyance is made,⁶¹ including a mortgage executed by the grantor and covenantor,⁶² constitutes a breach of the covenant, and, according to some authorities, the grantee's right to recover for the breach is not defeated because he himself becomes the purchaser at the sale,⁶³ or surrenders possession to the purchaser upon demand.⁶⁴ The covenant is not breached, however, by the mere

Argument

The view stated in the text has been presented by way of argument in demonstrating that the breach, if any, occurred when the deed was given and that the right of action therefor did not pass to a subsequent purchaser.—Simons v. Diamond Match Co., 123 N.W. 1132, 159 Mich. 241.

Uninclosed or unoccupied lands

(1) In respect of uninclosed and uncultivated lands, it was held that the mere facts that the mortgage was foreclosed and that the property was sold did not effect a breach where there was no change of possession and the purchaser on foreclosure made no attempt to disturb the covenantee, the presumption having been indulged that the covenantee was in possession.—Wood v. Forncrook, 8 Thomps. & C., N.Y., 303.

(2) In an earlier case in New York, the view was taken that a mortgage foreclosure sale is in itself an eviction, where the premises are unoccupied.—St. John v. Palmer, 5 Hill, N.Y., 599.

Purchase-money mortgage

There may be a breach by the acts of the grantor who has taken a purchase-money mortgage for part of the purchase price.—Cassada v. Stabel, 90 N.Y.S. 533, 98 App.Div. 600.

(2) In an early case, it was held that the covenant was not broken merely because the covenantee was compelled to purchase the land at a foreclosure sale in order to prevent an eviction.—Waldron v. McCarty, 3 Johns., N.Y., 471.

existence of an outstanding mortgage, containing a power of sale.⁶⁵

Dower. A covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken by an assignment of dower in the land conveyed,⁶⁶ but the existence of an inchoate right of dower in the premises is not a breach of the covenant.⁶⁷

Easement. The existence and exercise of an easement in the premises conveyed may constitute a breach of the covenant.⁶⁸

Taxes and assessments. Actual or constructive eviction is essential in order to permit the recovery of taxes paid by the covenantee in an action on the covenant.⁶⁹ The redemption by the grantee of the premises when sold for taxes, before the time to redeem has expired, does not constitute in itself a breach of the covenant, in view of want of indefeasible and paramount title and of eviction or its equivalent.⁷⁰ So the mere fact that the covenantee when he resells the property deducts from the price on resale the amount of an outstanding local assessment to which the property was subject when it was conveyed to him does not constitute an eviction.⁷¹

Cotenancies. There is authority for the view that the adjudging of a person a tenant in common with the grantee or person entitled to the benefit of the covenant is such a breach of the unity conveyed as to amount to a disturbance of possession so as to warrant recovery for breach of the covenant, although there was no actual eviction,⁷² and that a breach may result from the recognition and purchase by such grantee or person of the right of the cotenant, even though there had been only constructive possession of the property involved.⁷³

It has been held, however, that the covenantee cannot recover as for an eviction from the whole of the land conveyed on proof that one claiming under a paramount title had recovered in ejectment an undivided half interest therein.⁷⁴

Claim of remainderman. Breach is not effected by the failure of the grantor's remainder during the life of a life tenant where the grantor has good title to the life estate,⁷⁵ but the rule is otherwise where the life estate of the covenantor has been terminated by his death and the covenantee has been duly evicted by the remainderman.⁷⁶

Violation of building regulation. The covenant is not breached notwithstanding the existence of a violation of a building regulation when the deed was given where the covenantee himself cures the violation while he continues in possession.⁷⁷

§ 109. Covenant for Further Assurance

While there is breach of the covenant for further assurance where the covenantor fails or neglects to make such other and further assurance as the terms of the covenant require, in general only such act may be required or demanded as is necessary, reasonable, and in accordance with the nature and purport of the original bargain.

In general the covenant for further assurance is broken by the failure or neglect of the covenantor to make such other and further assurance of the title conveyed as the terms of the covenant require.⁷⁸ It has been held, however, that a substantial breach of the covenant occurs only upon a disturbance or eviction, actual or constructive, of the covenantee;⁷⁹ but it has also been held that an action may be maintained for a breach of the covenant where the grantee has paid a mortgage outstanding at the execution of the deed.⁸⁰ Where, under the covenant, the covenantor perfects the seizin before the injury is sustained, by supplying the missing link in his chain of title, the grantee cannot rescind the conveyance and recover the price as for breach of covenant of seizin.⁸¹

The act which may be required or demanded under the covenant in general must be necessary,⁸² must be reasonable,⁸³ and must not differ from the nature and purport of the original bargain.⁸⁴ Since in some jurisdictions the statutory covenant for further assurance, implied from the use of certain words, relates only to such defects as the grantor can supply, as shown supra § 46, under such a covenant the grantor cannot be required to procure conveyance from persons who hold encumbrances not created by him,⁸⁵ the covenant embracing only those encumbrances of which the covenantor has control.⁸⁶ There is apparently authority for the view, however, that a vendor who has sold a bad title may be required under a covenant for further assurance to convey any title which he may have acquired since the conveyance, although he actually purchased such title for a valuable consideration.⁸⁷

The covenantee must give notice of the assurance, specifying its nature, where the deed does not specify any particular assurance and provides for giving further assurance on his request.⁸⁸ In some jurisdictions, by virtue of statute, the expenses incurred in performing the covenant must be borne by the covenantee.⁸⁹

Title acquired from United States. A covenant that, if the grantors obtain title from the United States, they will convey the same to the grantees by deed of general warranty entitles the grantees to a conveyance of the legal title when the contingency happens.⁹⁰ It has been held, however, that such covenant does not cover the acquisition of the title of the United States from any intermediate party.⁹¹

a. In General

A breach of a covenant of warranty consists of an eviction under a lawful paramount title. It may exist in respect of an appurtenance on part of the land, but not by reason of an unlawful claim by a trespasser. The limited scope of a special warranty is, of course, to be considered in determining whether there has been a breach thereof.

A covenant of general warranty is broken by eviction actual or constructive, under a lawful paramount title.⁹² Subject to the rules, and the exceptions thereto, as to the necessity of an eviction, actual or constructive, see infra § 112, under a paramount title or right, see infra § 111, there may be a breach of warranty where: There is a failure of title;⁹³ the grantors do not constitute all the owners in common;⁹⁴ the top of an adjoining building leans over the land;⁹⁵ improvements on the land conveyed encroach on the adjoining land of another person;⁹⁶ or, as shown in subsequent subdivisions of this section, where there is a lien or encumbrance on the land at the time of the conveyance. Although, generally speaking, a covenant of warranty is a covenant in futuro, see supra § 47, nevertheless it is broken as soon as made where the covenantor has no title⁹⁷ and is not in possession.⁹⁸

In other particular cases there may be no breach of warranty or right to recover damages therefor,⁹⁹ especially where the warranty is a special one, such as one warranting only against claims or demands by the covenantor and persons claiming through or under him or persons under whom he claims.¹ A covenant of warranty does not bind the covenantor to defend the title conveyed by him, or to protect the covenantee, against a mere trespasser who has no title² or against an unlawful claim of title, constituting, at the most, a mere cloud on the title.³ It is not breached by a title already vested in the covenantee;⁴ but the subsequent acquisition of title by the grantee or his heirs is no defense in a suit for breach of the warranty.⁵

It is no excuse, or defense to an action, for breach of a covenant of warranty that: A bond of indemnity had been given by the covenantor to the covenantee;⁶ the covenantor was not the real grantor;⁷ the defect in title may be cured;⁸ or the covenantor has previously recovered judgment against the evictor.⁹ The warranty is not satisfied by a conveyance to the covenantee of other property in an effort to make the warranty good.¹⁰

Contingency. There is no breach of covenant because the title depends on a contingency where the contingency is too remote to be entitled to recognition¹¹ or there is merely a condition subsequent,¹² and no outstanding title or existing claim.¹³ However, it has been held that, where the validity of a conveyance was dependent upon the contingency of proof of the grantor's title subsequently to be made, there was a breach of covenant of warranty for which the grantee was entitled to damages, as if the failure of the title had been absolute.¹⁴

Part of land. While there may be a breach of warranty by failure of title to part of the land,¹⁵ an eviction caused by a mutual mistake in a mere matter of description of the land conveyed is not a breach of a covenant of warranty contained in the deed,¹⁶ unless such erroneous description is

Where the grantee in a deed by partners covenants to pay all partnership debts of the grantors, the fact that the grantors are held liable for debts other than those which they represented they owed does not constitute a breach of the warranty in their deed.—Forbes v. Inclusion of lots not owned by grantor

Where lots not owned by grantor

of the essence of the contract.¹⁷ If the deed is, or can be, reformed, the right of action, if any, for breach of warranty is the same as if the description had been correct in the first instance.¹⁸ In some states a shortage or deficiency in the recited acreage or other quantity of land conveyed is deemed not to be a breach of a general warranty of title;¹⁹ and even where there is considered to be an express or implied warranty of approximate quantity a comparatively slight deficiency is not a breach,²⁰ although there is a breach where the deficiency is substantial or more than reasonable or the area of the tract actually conveyed is not a near approximation to the acreage covenanted for.²¹

Appurtenances being within the scope and meaning of the covenant of warranty, a failure of title thereto is a breach of the covenant.²² In order, however, that the loss of a right may constitute a breach of the covenant, it must be a legal appurtenant to the land within the meaning of the deed.²³

b. Subsequent Acts of Covenantor

Except when they are of such nature and effect as to operate as a discharge of the warranty, subsequent acts of the covenantor do not prevent or excuse a breach, nor defeat recovery therefor, but may instead, when followed by eviction, result in a breach, as where the covenantor confers paramount title on another person.

While a conveyance subsequently made by a grantor is not itself a breach of the covenant of warranty contained in his prior conveyance,²⁴ it has frequently been held that an eviction of the covenantee, by reason of a paramount title derived from the covenantor subsequently to his conveyance, constitutes a breach of the covenant of warranty;²⁵ but, as appears supra in § 48, this doctrine must be regarded as an exception to the general rule that a covenant of general warranty relates only to the title as it existed at the time the conveyance was made, and is opposed by some authorities upon the ground that the breach creates liability as of the date of the deed and not of the eviction.²⁶

Perfection of title. If prior to the eviction of the grantee a grantor of land with covenant of warranty purchases an outstanding title it inures to the benefit of the grantee, and thus operates as a discharge of the warranty;²⁷ but such purchase by the grantor after eviction of his grantee does not defeat the right of the latter to recover for breach of the covenant.²⁸

Tender. It is not a defense that the covenantor has tendered back the purchase price.²⁹ In an action for breach of a covenant to convey land by a lawful title, the question whether a tender of title was made before or after the commencement of the action is immaterial where it appears that the title tendered was insufficient.³⁰

c. Acts or Omissions of Covenantee

Acts or omissions on the part of the covenantee may prevent recovery by him.

It is a good defense or excuse that the covenantee: Prevented the covenantor from perfecting his title;³¹ yielded to an invalid and inferior claim;³² yielded against the grantor's wishes to a claim which was being contested by the grantor, it not appearing that the proceedings must necessarily were included in the deed by mutual mistake, there was no breach of covenant of warranty.—Maxwell v. Wayne Nat. Bank, 95 S.E. 147, 175 N.C. 180.

Failure to include all land pointed out

If the seller makes a deed which by its terms does not include some of the land pointed out, the purchaser cannot recover upon the warranty for it is only where there is failure of title to part of the land which the deed purports to convey that the covenant of warranty is broken.—*Compton v. have resulted adversely;³³ invited an eviction or brought it about through his fraud or collusion;³⁴ or brought about a redemption by inducing a person to complete it, and aiding him in doing so, after he had announced his intention to abandon it.³⁵ Also, as a general rule, a covenantee cannot recover any damages which could have been prevented or avoided by reasonable diligence on his part.³⁶

On the other hand, it has been held not to be a good defense or excuse that the covenantee: Could have discovered the defect in title by inspecting the records;³⁷ promised not to use the deed against the vendor;³⁸ did not have actual possession;³⁹ allowed the premises to deteriorate;⁴⁰ invited the assertion of hostile rights by bringing suit to quiet his title;⁴¹ did not urge, as an objection to the form of action brought to try the title, the fact that the land was vacant when an action of ejectment was brought;⁴² or failed to record his deed,⁴³ prevent a sale of the property for delinquent taxes due by the grantor,⁴⁴ defend an action against him involving title,⁴⁵ appeal from an adverse decision,⁴⁶ object until eviction,⁴⁷ or to take actual possession at the time of the conveyance to him, even though, if he had done so, he would have acquired title by adverse possession⁴⁸ or would have prevented a mortgagee of the land from becoming mortgagee in possession.⁴⁹ The fact that a covenant of a title based on a mortgage foreclosure sale, on the foreclosure proceedings being held invalid, took a quitclaim deed from the mortgagor did not relieve the covenantor from liability for breach of covenant, although the quitclaim deed was without consideration, and was taken with intent to prejudice the rights of the covenantor.⁵⁰

d. Liens and Encumbrances Generally

With some exceptions, a covenant of warranty may be breached by liens and encumbrances outstanding as a charge against the land at the time of the conveyance and which the covenantee has not agreed to discharge, at least where there is an eviction by reason thereof, and, according to some, but not other, authorities, by the mere existence thereof at the date of the conveyance.

There may be a breach of a covenant of warranty by reason of a lien on the land which is prior and superior to the interest of the covenantee.⁵¹ The eviction of a grantee by reason of an encumbrance resting on the land at the time of its conveyance is a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed,⁵² unless, knowing of its existence at the time of the execution of the deed, he has agreed to discharge it.⁵³ Indeed, according to some,⁵⁴ but not other,⁵⁵ authorities, a vendor's covenant of warranty is breached by the existence of an outstanding encumbrance at the time the deed is delivered. It has been held that the covenant of warranty in a conveyance is broken where the land conveyed is subject to the right of another to enter and enjoy the benefit of oil and asphalt rights for a certain number of years,⁵⁶ or where a third person has a right to payment of a royalty up to a specified amount from the first oil produced out of the land,

Encumbrance consisting of timber deed

A covenant of warranty is broken when made if, at the time, there is an existing encumbrance consisting of a timber deed conveying the right to cut and remove timber from the land.—Jerome Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Munsell, 275 S.W. 709, 169 Ark. 201.

regardless of whether the right to the royalty is treated as an interest in land or as an encumbrance.⁵⁷

The covenant is not breached by: Outstanding encumbrances, other than liens created by operation of law, over which the covenantor has no control, such as one created by his grantor,⁵⁸ or one created or suffered by the covenantee;⁵⁹ liens not in existence at the time of the execution of the deed,⁶⁰ such as liens created by operation of law which had not attached at the date of the conveyance;⁶¹ or a judgment against a drainage district which is not a lien or encumbrance on the privately owned land in question, although such land is within the boundaries or geographical area, of the district.⁶²

Under a general warranty, at least where it is deemed to include a warranty against encumbrances,⁶³ it is the duty of the covenantor to pay off and discharge all liens and encumbrances outstanding as a charge against the land other than any, or a specific amount thereof, assumed to be paid by the covenantee.⁶⁴ Payment of the encumbrance by the vendor frees the title whether the release therefor is recorded or not.⁶⁵ without awaiting actual eviction see infra § 112 b (2).

e. Mortgages and Deeds of Trust

A breach of a covenant of warranty may consist of an eviction under a mortgage or deed of trust.

An eviction under a mortgage or deed of trust is a breach of the covenant of warranty,⁶⁶ unless the mortgage or deed of trust is specially excepted,⁶⁷ or the eviction is in consequence of the negligence of the covenantee;⁶⁸ but the existence of a mortgage is not a breach of warranty of title if the covenantee has not the right of possession, and has not been evicted or kept out of possession by parties in under a better title.⁶⁹

While there is a fulfillment of his duty, rather than a breach of covenant, where the covenantor pays and discharges a mortgage,⁷⁰ there is a breach where the covenantor purchases an outstanding mortgage given by his grantor and asserts it against the covenantee.⁷¹

f. Taxes and Assessments

Ordinarily the question of whether there is liability on a covenant of warranty for a tax or assessment unpaid at the time of the execution of the deed containing the covenant depends on whether the tax or assessment was a lien at that time.

Unless excepted in the deed,⁷² the enforcement

Exception in added covenant

In a case where to a general warranty, deemed in legal effect to be a covenant for quiet enjoyment, there was added conjunctively a covenant against encumbrances, from which a mortgage on the lands conveyed and other lands was excepted, the court mentioned, but did not decide, several questions, including one as to whether the mortgage was excepted from the covenant of quiet enjoyment. It did decide, however, that the grantor's duties were contractual and that any failure to protect grantee or assigns against mortgage, if actionable, under circumstances, grew out of covenants, not deceit. Also it held that the clause as to "other lands," if capable of being classed as a distinct warranty, was not breached, it appearing without dispute that the mortgage did include other lands at the time the deed was made, and indeed at the time of the foreclosure, although at that time some of the other lands had been released from the mortgage.—Keel v. Ikard, 133 So. 906, 222 Ala. 617.

Effect of exception as to other encumbrances

"All taxes" as including special assessments

The term "all taxes" in an exception from a covenant of general of a tax or assessment lien against a grantee, due and unpaid at the time of the conveyance of the land with covenant of warranty, is a breach of the covenant,⁷³ even though, at the time of the execution of the deed, the grantor did not have knowledge of the lien.⁷⁴ Indeed, except where it is otherwise by virtue of statute,⁷⁵ an assessment or tax may, even before the amount thereof is ascertained, be such a lien as to constitute a breach of warranty in a deed.⁷⁶ Also the lien of unmatured installments of assessments may give rise to a breach;⁷⁷ and even though a statute providing that unmatured installments of special assessments shall not be deemed to be within the terms of a general covenant of warranty ordinarily will be accorded effect,⁷⁸ yet, despite such a statute, the contract of sale and deed may be so worded and construed as to subject the covenantor to liability for unmatured installments.⁷⁹ Furthermore, a covenant of warranty may cover taxes previously assessed, although they do not fall due until the following year.⁸⁰

On the other hand, the covenant is not breached by future taxes or assessments⁸¹ or by special taxes or assessments which have not become liens at the time of the conveyance;⁸² and under some circumstances there is no liability on the covenant for taxes which have become delinquent or assessments which have become liens prior to the delivery of the deed, but after the making of the contract of sale, delivery of bond of title, placing of the deed in escrow, or delivery of possession to the purchaser.⁸³ The redemption by the grantee of premises when sold for taxes before the time to redeem has expired is not of itself a breach of the covenant of warranty.⁸⁴

There is, of course, no breach on account of a warranty includes special benefit assessments.—Building & Loan Ass'n of Jackson v. Woodward, 131 So. 874, 159 Miss. 343.

Where covenantee assumes payment, in the deed, of all special assessments, levy of additional assessment after the date of the deed does not operate as breach of covenant of warranty.—Kleinmeyer v. Willenbrock, 210 N.W. 447, 203 Iowa 1049.

Taxes levied after specified year—Taxes for the years 1909, 1910, and 1911 on property formerly exempt, but conveyed to a nonexempt party in 1908, and not entered in the record of the board of assessors until 1912, when they were entered as back taxes, were not levied on the lots in question until subsequent to the year 1911, and did not constitute a breach of a warranty in a deed against all lawful claims "except taxes . . . levied subsequent to the year 1911."—*Willis v. 83. Purchaser treated as owner

Where purchaser was given possession of premises on execution of deed placed in escrow, and on delivery of deed and final settlement between the parties was charged with all repairs, insurance, and interest on purchase price, and with installment assessed against the property for paying pursuant to proceedings had during interval between execution of deed and delivery thereof, and which the vendor had paid, the purchaser could not recover from vendor the amount of paying installments which subsequently became due, on theory that the paving certificates were encumbrances covered by the general warranty, since purchaser became invested with all benefits and chargeable with all burdens or ownership on execution of deed, in view of delivery of possession, and the construction placed upon the contract by the parties themselves as evidenced by the final settlement.—Leeson v. City of Houston, Tex. Com.App., 243 S.W. 485, affirming, Civ.App., 226 S.W. 763.

Fault of purchaser

Where a bond for title, which is transferred to successive purchasers, provides that the purchaser is to pay all taxes, and an intermediate purchaser of part of the land fails to pay taxes assessed after the contract of sale, whereupon such part is sold under tax execution, the vendor is not liable on his covenant of warranty in the deed to the last purchaser for this defect in the title, which is not caused by the vendor but is attributable to the fault of the purchaser.—Finn v. Lifsey, 150 S.E. 908, 169 Ga. 599, reversing Lifsey v. Finn, 145 S.E. 519, 38 Ga.App. 671, vacated 151 S.E. 392, 40 Ga.App. 735.

84. N.Y.—Mead v. Stackpole, 40 Hun 473.

paving charge which, although invalid, has been paid prior to the conveyance, so that it constitutes no lien at that time;⁸⁵ but it is held that, an unpaid tax lien of record, however invalid, is a cloud on the title and therefore ground for enforcement of the warranty.⁸⁶

A person may be liable on an unrestricted express warranty for taxes which accrued prior to his ownership.⁸⁷ However, a vendor who conveys land with warranty against all lawful claims of those claiming by, through, or under, him is not liable on the covenant to his grantee for taxes assessed against the property while in the possession of a third person, to whom the grantor had conveyed an equity of redemption, but who had subsequently reconveyed to the grantor.⁸⁸

g. Dower

A covenant of warranty affords protection against dower rights and is breached by the successful assertion of a ripened dower right.

The eviction of a grantee under a paramount right of dower is a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed to him.⁸⁹ While the covenant is protection against a contingent right of dower,⁹⁰ yet, until assertion, the mere existence of a right of dower is not a breach of the covenant,⁹¹ especially in a deed by an heir to a coheir conveying the grantor's interest in the lands owned by decedent at his death.⁹² The covenantor may prevent a breach of his covenant by purchasing the dower interest for the benefit of his grantee;⁹³ but a release of dower contained in the same instrument as the covenant of general warranty does not adversely affect the covenant nor prevent its breach by a failure of title from some other cause.⁹⁴

h. Leases, Tenancies, and Acts of Tenants

An eviction of the grantee by reason of an unexpired lease or tenancy may constitute a breach of a covenant of warranty, as may a removal by a tenant of the grantor of permanent fixtures under an agreement giving him the right of removal.

In the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁹⁵ as a general rule the eviction of a grantee with covenant of warranty by reason of an unexpired lease or tenancy of the premises is a breach of the covenant of warranty,⁹⁶ unless the covenant recites existence of the lease and possession thereunder by the lessee⁹⁷ or unless the grantee with knowledge of the lease accepts attornment from the lessee.⁹⁸ The very object of the conveyance by warranty deed may have been to compel the grantor to oust the tenant in order that the grantee might have the full possession and enjoyment of the premises.⁹⁹ At any rate, where the land was in the possession of a tenant of the grantor at the time of the conveyance, no duty rested on the grantee to dispossess the tenant, but rather it became and was the duty of the grantor to deliver possession in accordance with the deed.¹ There are, however, a few cases which hold that the covenants of warranty in a deed are not broken by the existence of an outstanding lease.²

Removal of fixtures by tenant. In the absence of an express exception or reservation in the deed, the removal by a tenant of the grantor of permanent fixtures upon the premises granted, under an agreement giving the tenant the right of removal, is a breach of the covenant of warranty contained in the deed of conveyance.³

Collection of part of rents and expiration of lease

Purchaser is not entitled to damages for breach of warranty in contract for sale of land in that land was encumbered by a lease, where such lease had expired before vendor sued for purchase price and purchaser had collected a part of rentals due on such lease from lessee.—Pritchett v. ments, at least where they are private; but there is a conflict of authority as to whether the covenant is breached by public highways or railroad rights of way over the land conveyed.

The existence and use of a private right of way over granted premises, to which they were subject at the time of the conveyance, is a breach of the covenant of warranty,⁴ even though, as shown supra in § 39, the covenantee had knowledge, at the date of his deed, of the existence of the right of way. So also the existence of building restrictions upon land conveyed with a covenant of warranty is, upon enforcement, a breach of the covenant,⁵ or, at least, the easement created by building restrictions is a paramount right which may be so exercised, as to work a breach of the covenant.⁶ However, as to streets, highways, and other public rights of way, it is variously held that: A public highway over land conveyed with covenants of warranty is such an easement as to constitute a breach of the covenant;⁷ the covenant is not breached by the existence of a public street or highway in actual use over the land at the time of the conveyance,⁸ although the rule does not apply to a right of way unknown to the purchaser and not discernible by observation;⁹ and that a public alleyway or other public right of way over city property is a breach of covenant,¹⁰ while a public highway or other public right of way over rural property is not.¹¹ There is a like conflict of authority as to whether the existence of a railroad right of way across land at the time of its conveyance constitutes a breach of the covenant of warranty, it being decided in some cases that it does,¹² and in others that it does not.¹³ At any rate, there can be no recovery under the warranty on this ground where the railroad has forfeited the right of way by failure to perform a condition in the grant to it.¹⁴ While there may be a recovery on the covenant for a properly granted pipe line right of way,¹⁵ it is otherwise as to alleged pipe line, telephone, or electric light rights of way which, because of the absence of written grants thereof, do not constitute encumbrances.¹⁶

The existence of a private easement, created prior to, and excepted from, the conveyance containing the covenant of warranty, is not a defense where the eviction was under title of the public.¹⁷

If the description of the land conveyed is such as to import a warranty that the streets which bound the land exist, a failure to open them is a breach of the covenant;¹⁸ and an eviction by paramount title from an easement in an alleyway or community driveway, passing under the deed as appurtenant to the premises, is a breach of the grantor's covenant of warranty;¹⁹ but the temporary interruption of an easement, although it may have existed at the time of the purchase and have continued until an action to recover the purchase money is brought, cannot be regarded as a breach of the covenant of warranty.²⁰

J. Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain

Unless it precedes the making of the covenant, the exercise of the right of eminent domain is not a breach of a covenant of warranty.

A covenantee cannot maintain an action upon the covenant of warranty in his deed, against the covenantor, in consequence of the exercise of the right of eminent domain by the government,²¹ unless such exercise preceded the making of the covenant.²²

§ 111. — Paramount Title or Right

It is essential to, but not alone sufficient to constitute, a breach of a covenant of warranty that the title or right under which the covenantee is evicted or to which he yields be paramount.

In order to constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty the title or right under which the covenantee is evicted or to which he yields must be paramount²³ and have been in existence at the date the warranty was made.²⁴ A title or right is superior and paramount where it prevails in an action²⁵ or is successfully asserted.²⁶ Conversely, a covenantor ordinarily is not liable to the covenantee for damages sustained by the latter by reason of an unsuccessful attack upon his title by a third person,²⁷ although it has been held that if the hostile title asserted is a legal title in fact outstanding against the grantee, but for equitable reasons not enforceable against him, he is entitled to recover from the covenantor the expenses incurred in defending his title.²⁸ A covenantee who, voluntarily or without suit, yields to an alleged paramount title or claim assumes the risk of its turning out not to be so.²⁹

Ordinarily the mere existence of an outstanding paramount title does not alone constitute a breach of a covenant of warranty;³⁰ as shown infra § 112 a, there must also be some hostile assertion of the adverse title.

shown by the facts to be actual or constructive,³³ or something which in contemplation of law is equivalent to an eviction,³⁴ such as disturbance of possession,³⁵ under paramount title or right, see supra § 111, is necessary to constitute a breach of a covenant of warranty. As stated supra in § 111, the mere existence of an outstanding paramount title to land will not authorize a recovery by the grantee in an action for breach of the covenant; to warrant recovery there must be some hostile assertion of the adverse title.³⁶

The rule as to the necessity of an eviction or its equivalent is subject to certain exceptions³⁷ or, at least, apparent exceptions;³⁸ but a matter which in some cases is declared to be an exception may in other cases, as appears hereinafter in § 112 b, be considered a constructive eviction. Exceptions are said to exist where: There was an entire want of title in the grantor;³⁹ he had only an equitable title with a right to legal title;⁴⁰ he was without title to the minerals;⁴¹ he is insolvent or a nonresident⁴² or has been guilty of fraud in the transaction;⁴³ the superior title is in the state;⁴⁴ or the covenantee did not, and could not, without committing a trespass, take possession under his deed.⁴⁵

Early rule has been relaxed to the extent that when one who takes under a deed attempts to take possession of the property purchased and finds another claiming under a superior title to his, and the latter denies him the right of possession and threatens enforcement of his rights through the courts or by pursuing other legal methods, such purchaser may, if outstanding title is superior to his own, resort to his remedy of suit for breach of warranty.—Felts v. Whitaker, Tex.Civ. App., 129 S.W.2d 682, error granted.

Lack of showing of inability to take possession

Where lands described in the field notes of a deed were located in a certain survey and because of a mistake in applying the field notes to the ground the grantee went into possession of a tract in another survey he could not, on being dispossessed by the owner, claim reimbursement from his grantor on his covenant of warranty, there being nothing to show that the grantee could not take possession of all the land which his deed described.—Crump v. Wilson, Tex.Civ.App., 260 S.W. 296.

- (3) Adverse possession
- (4) Governmental acts
- (5) Exercise of easement or other right
- (6) Legal process or proceedings

(1) In General

For the purpose of a breach of a covenant of warranty, there is a sufficient eviction where there is an implied or constructive eviction or such a disturbance in possession as to be equivalent to an actual eviction or ouster.

Eviction, in the sense of a breach of warranty of title, is a deprivation of the enjoyment of the whole or, as shown infra this section, a part of granted premises by reason of a paramount title or right.⁴⁶ There may be an eviction, under paramount title or right, and a breach of warranty without any actual physical ouster, eviction, or dispossession,⁴⁷ as where there is an implied⁴⁸ or constructive⁴⁹ eviction, or such a disturbance in title and possession as to be equivalent to an actual eviction or ouster.⁵⁰ It is sufficient if the grantee is compelled to yield to a paramount title to prevent actual eviction,⁵¹ especially where the deed passed no title to the grantee,⁵² this being a constructive eviction.⁵³ Also constructive eviction may be caused by the inability of the purchaser to obtain possession,⁵⁴ and where a grantor, without either title or possession, assumes to convey property with a covenant of warranty, there is at once a constructive eviction.⁵⁵

In a particular case, there may be no constructive eviction⁵⁶ or eviction of any kind.⁵⁷ The doctrine of constructive eviction has limitations which the court will not ignore where, to do so, would be without justification and would confuse the offices of covenants of seisin, and covenants of warranty.⁵⁸ There is neither actual nor constructive eviction where the covenantee continues in possession,⁵⁹

Hopeless contest

A warrantee need not fight in court or otherwise a force he cannot resist or make a hopeless contest of another's right to title before he can yield to the title, right, or claim and maintain action for breach of warranty.—Felts v. Whitaker, Tex.Civ. App., 129 S.W.2d 682, error granted.

Lack of meritorious defense

Where the holder of the superior title actively and affirmatively asserts his claim and demands a release from the covenantee, and the latter makes an unsuccessful effort to acquire the superior title, he is not required to assert a defense, wholly without merit, under the title conveyed to him, but instead may yield to the superior title and resort to the warranty.—Love v. Minerva Petroleum Corporation, Tex.Civ.App., 105 S.W.2d 892.

Constant fear of law suit

Where a house on the improved premises in question encroaches on adjacent property and, if it is not removed, the covenantee will live constantly in fear of a law suit, he may remove the house and recover the cost of removal from the covenantor, even though the adjoining owner probably could not require removal because the existence of the encroachment for more than ten years created a continuous apparent servitude.—Schill v. Churchill, 123 So. 139, 11 La.App. 181.

Surrender rightful under circumstances

Where land for which grantee had contracted to pay ten thousand dollars was advertised for sale with other lands under a deed of trust, securing notes for twenty-seven thousand dollars, and grantee made unsuccessful effort to induce grantors to discharge encumbrance or protect his title from the sale, his surrender of possession, which he had a right, under the circumstances, to make, did not preclude him from recovering from grantors for breach of warranty of title.—Sutton v. Cannon, 100 So. 24, 135 Miss. 368.

Possession of rights and privileges

There is a constructive eviction where, at the time of the conveyance, there is an outstanding royalty right attaching to the initial production of oil which makes it impracticable for any one to drill for oil on the site and prevents the covenantee from ever possessing the rights and privileges warranted to him.—Compton v. Trico Oil Co., Tex. Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 534, error refused.

57. Matters held not to constitute eviction

(1) Outstanding paramount title.—Hamilton v. Farmer, 292 S.W. 683, 173 Ark. 341.

(2) Defect in covenantee's title.—Lindner v. Leipold, 5 Pa.Dist. & Co. 498.

or at least where he has actual, undisturbed, undisputed, and unchallenged possession.⁶⁰ Where the covenantee continues to occupy the premises, there is a constructive eviction only when he submits by valid attornment to a claim by title paramount, so that, although continuing in possession, he ceases to hold under the subordinate title and begins a new holding under the paramount title.⁶¹ There is no eviction where the covenantee has not yielded to a paramount title and is not in a situation requiring him to yield presently to such a title as a matter of legal duty.⁶² Also a purely voluntary surrender of possession, without threat, menace, or well-founded belief that the outstanding title or right will be presently asserted or enforced, is not a constructive eviction.⁶³

Part of premises. There may be an eviction operating as a breach of a covenant of warranty where the covenantee is ousted from, deprived of the enjoyment of, or forced to yield to, a paramount title to a part of the premises conveyed,⁶⁴ although it has been held that an eviction from the occupied portion of a tract is not an eviction from the constructive possession of the unoccupied portion.⁶⁵

(2) Purchase or Extinguishment of Outstanding Title or Encumbrance

A sufficient constructive eviction exists where, to prevent an actual eviction, the covenantee purchases an outstanding paramount title, or removes a lawful, existing encumbrance, asserted against him on the land under such circumstances as to induce a well founded belief that it will be enforced.

There is a sufficient eviction to amount to a breach of a covenant of warranty when, to prevent an eviction, the covenantee purchases an outstanding paramount title asserted against him.⁶⁶ In Mississippi, while an action technically for breach of warranty would not lie, for want of a sufficient eviction, where the paramount title was so purchased, yet an equivalent remedy was afforded by an action in assumpsit, or by suit in equity, and since the abolition of forms of action by the code the general rule may be said to prevail in Mississippi.⁶⁷ However, the purchase of an outstanding title is a constructive eviction when, and only when, the covenantee may be said to suffer an involuntary loss, as where an entry is made, suit is brought, or the outstanding title is asserted in some way and under such circumstances as induce a well founded belief that it will be enforced and under the menace thereof the covenantee purchases the adverse title.⁶⁸ Under a statute, considered infra § 112 b (6), making the commencement of a suit menacing possession an element of a cause of action on a covenant of warranty, the purchase of a paramount title will not support a suit on the covenant.⁶⁹

Under a covenant of general warranty, the covenantee or his successor in right may, without awaiting actual eviction, pay and remove a lawful, existing mortgage or other encumbrance asserted against the land, and recover the amount so paid from the covenantor.⁷⁰

(3) Adverse Possession

Adverse possession by a third person under paramount title or color of title at the date of the conveyance, as distinguished from adverse possession subsequent to the conveyance or a mere intrusion on land or a tortious possession without title or color of title, is a sufficient eviction to constitute a breach of a covenant of warranty.

Adverse possession at the time of the conveyance of a third person by virtue of a paramount title is regarded as a sufficient eviction at that time to constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty;⁷¹ and it has been held that a grantor, by refusing to allow his grantee to enter and enjoy the premises conveyed and by maintaining an adverse interest in himself, commits a breach of his covenant of warranty.⁷² If the covenantor had no title, possession of third persons under color of title is sufficient to constitute a breach.⁷³ Where, however, the paramount title is in the warrantor, a tortious adverse possession does not constitute a breach of the covenant;⁷⁴ nor is it breached by the acquisition of title by a third person by adverse possession subsequent to the date of the conveyance;⁷⁵ and a mere intrusion on vacant land by one exercising no hostile or adverse possession is not such an eviction as to constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty in a deed to such land.⁷⁶

Hostile possession by government see infra § 112 b (4).

(4) Governmental Acts

Some, although not other, acts of the United States, a state, or a municipal corporation may constitute, or be equivalent to, an eviction.

Where the title to land attempted to be conveyed is in the public, there is such a hostile possession as amounts to an eviction the instant the deed is made.⁷⁷ However, this doctrine has been rejected as to tidal lands in an eastern state, which present a situation differing radically from public lands in a western state held for settlement and preëmption, and the view is taken that a constructive eviction should not be found to exist by reason of the single circumstance that title to tidal land is in the state where the covenantee is in possession which is peaceable and undisturbed and in no way challenged or threatened.⁷⁸ An eviction or the equivalent thereof may consist of: The final decision of the land department upon questions of title;⁷⁹ a sale of land by the government;⁸⁰ the action of the state, through its duly constituted authorities, in forfeiting a survey;⁸¹ or a grant of lands, presumptively belonging to the state, by the legislature to a village and the laying out of a street thereon by the latter.⁸² On the other hand, a refusal to confirm a claim under a Spanish grant does not amount to an eviction;⁸³ and a United States survey of the whole land along a stream on which the tract sold is situated, over which the surveyors must have passed, is not an eviction.⁸⁴

(5) Exercise of Easement or Other Right

The exercise of an easement or other paramount right in the premises conveyed prevents the covenantee from having the free use of the property and is a sufficient eviction.

The assertion and exercise of an easement or other paramount right in premises conveyed with a covenant of warranty effectually prevents the covenantee from having the free use of the property and is a sufficient eviction to constitute a breach of the covenant.⁸⁵ The flowing of lands, under a prior grant, constitutes an eviction within a covenant of warranty,⁸⁶ at least as to the land so overflowed;⁸⁷ but it has also been held that the diversion of water from a stream passing through land conveyed with warranty is not a breach of the covenant.⁸⁸

(6) Legal Process or Proceedings

Subject to some variation in particular states or in cases where there are no other matters sufficient to constitute an eviction, a judgment, or process or sale thereunder, or any deprivation or yielding of possession by virtue of a legal proceeding, may be sufficient, but not necessary, to constitute an eviction.

A deprivation or yielding of possession by virtue of a legal proceeding constitutes an eviction.⁸⁹ It has been held that the covenantee cannot recover on the warranty if he surrenders possession without any action having been brought to obtain possession;⁹⁰ and, by virtue of statute, a covenantee actually in possession may have no right of action for breach of covenant of warranty until his possession is menaced by the commencement of legal proceedings to obtain possession.⁹¹ However, the mere bringing of suit against the covenantee, not being dispossession, is not an eviction,⁹² nor is a verdict in ejectment not followed by a judgment.⁹³

Judgments generally. According to the modern authorities and the weight of authority generally, a final judgment or decree adverse to the covenantee's title or right to possession is sufficient eviction, or a sufficient substitute for, or equivalent of, eviction, to entitle him to sue for breach of the covenant of warranty,⁹⁴ provided the judgment is not void as to him;⁹⁵ but there are some authorities which contend that an adverse judgment in ejectment is not of itself an eviction such as will support an action for breach of a covenant of warranty.⁹⁶ At any rate, there may be a judgment or decree which does not constitute or amount to an eviction, such as an alternative judgment or decree,⁹⁷ a decree determining the existence of a contingency but not establishing any outstanding paramount title in any one who can presently assert an adverse claim,⁹⁸ or a judgment, finding, or adjudication that a person other than the covenantee is the owner of a fractional interest, subject to a life estate and without right to possession until the death of the life tenant.⁹⁹ Since, as indicated in the C.J.S. title Navigable Waters § 109, also 45 C.J. p 559 note 64, the ownership of tidewater flats is subject to the public easement of the right of general navigation, a judgment declaring certain buildings erected on such premises a nuisance is not such an eviction as will constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty.¹

A judgment perpetually enjoining a grantee from using an easement which his grantor assumed to convey to him may be treated as an eviction;² but it is otherwise as to a temporary injunction against violation of building restrictions.³

It has variously been held that: Rendition of a money judgment in favor of persons holding an outstanding title in a suit to quiet title brought by one to whom land had been conveyed with covenants of warranty amounts to such an eviction as constitutes a breach;⁴ a judgment for damages only, not establishing title and not constituting a bar to an action in ejectment, is not in effect, an eviction;⁵ and that a personal judgment or decree for a sum in lieu of dower does⁶ or does not⁷ amount to an eviction.

In some states nothing less than a judgment constitutes sufficient eviction;⁸ but the general rule seems to be otherwise,⁹ it being permissible for the covenantee to yield notwithstanding there has been no judgment in ejectment against him,¹⁰ and, as shown above in § 112 b (1), it not being necessary for him to wage a hopeless contest before yielding. Where he does not yield, nothing short of a final judgment or decree amounts to an eviction.¹¹

Execution or other process. While it is not essential to an eviction that it be under, or by force of, legal process issued on or under a judgment,¹² a dispossession by physical compulsion under process of law is an actual¹³ eviction.¹⁴ The levy of an execution against the covenantor on lands conveyed with covenant of warranty has been held such an eviction of the covenantee as to entitle him to an action on the covenant;¹⁵ but it has also been held that, where, after a sale of land, it is seized under an execution against the vendor and bought in by the vendee, the sheriff's deed transferring only the vendor's title, there is no eviction which will entitle the vendee to any claim except to be reimbursed the price of adjudication.¹⁶

The foreclosure of a mortgage or other lien is a sufficient constructive eviction to entitle the covenantee to sue for breach of the covenant of warranty,¹⁷ unless the foreclosure sale is invalid as to him because he was not made a party to the proceedings.¹⁸ This rule applies although the purchaser at the sale is the covenantee himself¹⁹ or his tenant;²⁰ and it has been held that the covenantee is not deprived of his right of action by the subsequent reversal of the judgment under which the sale was made.²¹ There is an eviction where the mortgagee takes possession under the judgment of foreclosure,²² or the purchaser at the foreclosure sale takes possession under the title which he receives,²³ or there is an ouster of the covenantee under a writ of possession obtained by the purchaser.²⁴ So too, where upon condition broken the mortgagee may enter, such entry by him will constitute a sufficient constructive eviction to enable the covenantee to sue for breach of the covenant.²⁵ However, it is held that a foreclosure judgment alone does not constitute a breach of a covenant of warranty and that no cause of action for breach of the covenant arises until the land is sold under the judgment.²⁶ Indeed, there is early authority for the view that even a sale is not a breach where no deed has been executed to the purchaser and no suit to obtain possession has been begun by him.²⁷ A foreclosure of, or a proceeding to foreclose, a purchase-money mortgage given by the covenantee to the covenantor does not give rise to a right of action on the covenant.²⁸

§ 113. Covenant as to Use of Property

Questions relating to the performance or breach of covenants concerning the use of property are discussed in the C.J.S. title Deeds §§ 163-166, 169, also 18 C.J. passim p 386 note 16-p 393 note 7; p 402 note 7-p 404 note 27.

IV. ACTIONS FOR BREACH

§ 114. Nature and Form of Remedy

The usual remedy for breach of covenant is an action at law for damages, although in a proper case equitable relief may be secured.

The usual remedy for a breach of a covenant is an action at law for damages.²⁹ While under certain circumstances, account, assumpsit, or debt may lie, as shown in the title Actions § 36, the most usual form of remedy at common law is an action of covenant to recover damages.³⁰

No remedy in rem

Breach of a covenant running with the land imposes a personal liability for damages, and does not impose a lien on the land in the nature of a judgment in rem.—Guild v. Wallis, 40 P.2d 737, 150 Or. 69, supplemented in other respects 41 P.2d 1119, 150 Or. 69, rehearing denied 42 P.2d 916, 150 Or. 69.

"Right of action" substantive

The obligation of a warranty and the right of action for its breach are both matters of substantive law, and the "right of action" should not be distinguished and regarded as matter of remedy or of adjective law.—Carpenter v. Herndon, 136 So. 577, 173 La. 239.

Covenant not running with land

The remedy for a breach of covenant which does not run with the

While an action on the covenants of a deed lies only at law,³¹ nevertheless, for matters which are peculiarly within equity jurisdiction, relief may be had in equity,³² and such jurisdiction is not confined by the limitations, nor founded on the principles, of an action of covenant in courts of law.³³ Relief may be had in equity where an assignee of a claim for breach of warranty takes only a part of the claim,³⁴ or in proper cases when the grantor is insolvent,³⁵ although equitable relief will not be granted where no adequate ground therefor exists,³⁶ and where enforcement of covenants would be inequitable, equity may decline to act and leave the parties to their action at law.³⁷

Neither a court of law nor of equity has jurisdiction to make whole a party damaged by a broken covenant of title by taking from the party in default an equal quantity of his land and bestowing it on the party injured.³⁸ The remedy on a deed containing covenants inter partes must depend on its terms considered with reference to the interest of the several individuals who are parties in the deed.³⁹ Since a grantee cannot recover for breach of a covenant for eviction from land not embraced in the deed, although it was intended to be included in the description, as shown infra § 116, the grantee's remedy in such a case is by proceedings in equity to correct the deed, and not by an action on the covenants.⁴⁰ The remedy for breach of a covenant to support, in consideration of a conveyance of land, is not an action for cancellation of the deed, but for damages or specific performance.⁴¹

*Where the deed stipulates the remedy, such stipulation may be controlling.*⁴²

Election of remedies. A defrauded vendee may have his election in a proper case to sue in tort for the fraud or in contract for breach of the covenants of warranty in his deed, but if he relies on the covenants, he must confine himself to such remedy.⁴³ Where a covenant is coupled with a condition subsequent, the grantor may have an election to proceed on the one or the other.⁴⁴ A railroad's breach of covenant in a deed to it to ditch and fence its right of way may afford the grantor an election to sue for specific performance, or for damages to land, or for injury to crops.⁴⁵

§ 115. What Law Governs

The remedies on real covenants are governed by the law of the state wherein the land is located and by the law in force at the time of the making of the covenant.

The remedies on a real covenant running with the land are governed by the laws of the state wherein the land is located.⁴⁶ In all cases, the law in force at the time of sale determines the vendor's obligation on his covenants.⁴⁷

§ 116. Grounds of Action in General

A breach of a valid covenant constitutes a cause of action, although in the absence of actual injury no more than nominal damages may be recovered.

A breach of covenant confers a right of action on the covenantee as in the case of a breach of any other kind of contract,⁴⁸ and whatever constitutes a breach of a covenant furnishes a ground of action thereon,⁴⁹ and it has been held that this is true notwithstanding no actual loss was sustained by reason of the breach,⁵⁰ although this doctrine is not adhered to in all cases;⁵¹ and with respect to covenants restricting the use of land, it has been said that an indispensable element of an action to enforce them is that its enforcement will benefit the party suing or its violation will injure him.⁵² As pointed out infra §§ 142-150, it is well settled that unless actual loss has been occasioned by breach of a covenant, only nominal damages can be recovered.

The execution of a purchase-money mortgage does not extinguish the mortgagor's right of action for subsequently broken covenants in the deed to him.⁵³ A void judgment of eviction is no ground of action for breach of a covenant of warranty,⁵⁴ nor is an eviction from land not embraced in the deed;⁵⁵ notwithstanding the deed was intended to cover land not embraced in the description;⁵⁶ and it has been held that an action for breach of the warranty contained in the covenants of a deed does not arise out of the act of the vendor in fraudulently concealing from, or misrepresenting to, the purchaser the boundaries of the property conveyed.⁵⁷

A grantee under a void deed cannot recover on the warranty of his grantors, although if the deed was made by mistake as to the interests of the parties the grantee may recover back the purchase money.⁵⁸ A grantee with covenants of warranty who voluntarily purchases an outstanding title after he has conveyed the land cannot recover on his grantor's warranty.⁵⁹ An action for breach of a covenant of seisin is available only to grantee where the title continues in a third person when the action is brought.⁶⁰ Mutual mistake, later corrected, in including plaintiff's land in a conveyance to a third person does not deprive plaintiff of ownership so as to preclude his recovery on a warranty on such land.⁶¹

rant and defend it to grantees against lawful claims and demands of all persons, and were not entitled to recover from grantor purchase price with interest, nor costs incurred in unsuccessful ejectment action against owner of lot fifteen.—Byerly v. rate and distinct ground of action,⁶² yet, in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits, it is proper to unite in one action claims for breaches occurring at different times.⁶³ An interference with the contract rights of a covenantee, after the commencement of an action by him for breach of the covenant in question, cannot avail him in such action.⁶⁴ In case of covenants running with the land, the last grantee is on breach entitled to an action against the covenantor, and need not allege nor prove that the intermediate assignees have kept their covenants.⁶⁵

§ 117. Conditions Precedent

- a. In general
- b. Removal of encumbrance
- c. Mutual and concurrent covenants
- d. Action by intermediate grantee
- e. Waiver of conditions

a. In General

Performance of conditions precedent is prerequisite to maintenance of suit on a covenant, and the terms of the covenant and other circumstances are determinative of whether any particular matter such as demand, rescission, or reformation of a deed does or does not constitute a condition precedent.

Performance of conditions precedent is essential to action on a covenant,⁶⁶ as where the covenant is to do something on demand, and demand, therefore, becomes prerequisite to maintenance of an action for breach.⁶⁷ On the other hand, there need be no performance as to matters which are not conditions precedent;⁶⁸ this is so where the covenantor has notice that the contingency has arisen on which the covenant is to be performed and a demand of performance is not generally required.⁶⁹ Where a grantor conveys real estate unconditionally, in consideration of a nominal sum and the grantee's assumption by a contemporaneous written contract to pay the grantor's debts, a breach of the grantee's agreement does not give the grantor a right of action unless the grantee has refused to pay such debts and the grantor has paid them or some of them.⁷⁰

Exhaustion of remedies by covenantee. A covenantee against whom a judgment has been rendered in an action of trespass is not bound, before suing on his covenant of warranty, to bring ejectment against plaintiffs in the trespass suit, unless his grantor pays the judgment or tenders security for the expenses of the ejectment suit;⁷¹ and if, after his purchase, he learns of the existence of an alleged superior title, the bringing of a suit by him to clear the title will not be considered as an invitation to assert the superior title, which in the absence of collusion will defeat his right to recover on the warranty.⁷²

Reformation of deed. An action for breach of covenant of title cannot be maintained until after reformation of the deed, where the description in a deed is so defective that it can convey no title,⁷³ or where the land sold cannot be identified by the description in the deed;⁷⁴ but where the description is merely insufficient, but not such as to render the deed void, recovery can be had without reformation of the deed.⁷⁵

Rescission, or an offer to rescind, is not a condition precedent to a purchaser's suit for damages for breach of warranty,⁷⁶ although it may be prerequisite to recovery of the purchase price.⁷⁷

b. Removal of Encumbrance

Broadly speaking, a covenantee may not sue at law for breach of a covenant against encumbrances until he has been evicted or removed the encumbrance, although this rule is relaxed in equity; and in the case of a covenant against liability, suit may be maintained when the liability accrues without prior payment by the covenantee.

While a grantee with covenants against encumbrances may, on satisfying the encumbrance, maintain a suit for breach of the covenant, as shown supra § 98, he cannot recover the amount thereof until he has removed or extinguished the encumbrance,⁷⁸ and he cannot avail himself of a breach of the covenant, either by action or by set-off, without proving that the sum paid by him to remove the encumbrance was either actually due, or else that he had notified the vendor requiring him to remove the encumbrance within a specified time.⁷⁹ Generally speaking, a covenantee cannot maintain an action at law for substantial damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, such as mortgages, unless he has been evicted or has paid and extinguished the encumbrance,⁸⁰ although this general rule governing actions at law does not necessarily control suits in equity, where the rule is subject to relaxation,⁸¹ and, accordingly, it is not an indispensable prerequisite to every suit that plaintiff first pay and extinguish the encumbrance.⁸² Thus, an action may be maintained on a covenant against liability the moment the liability accrues, and payment by the covenantee is not prerequisite to maintenance of the action,⁸³ and on breach of an absolute covenant by the grantor to pay and satisfy an outstanding lien, the covenantee may recover the amount of the lien, although he had neither paid, nor been called on to pay, anything on account thereof.⁸⁴ A grantor covenanting against encumbrances who seeks affirmative relief against his grantee, as on a foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage, must credit outstanding encumbrances for which he is liable.⁸⁵ As has been indicated supra § 98, grantees are not deprived of the right to recover on the covenant against encumbrances because they were not able to redeem the land by paying off the encumbrance, where they exhausted their defenses against the claim in the courts. It has been held that, until a purchaser is evicted, he cannot sue for breach of covenants of warranty unless the vendor is insolvent, a non-resident, or guilty of fraud.⁸⁶

Offer to return land

Where a conveyance provides for a refund of the entire purchase money in the case of "each acre of land the title to which shall fail," meaning prima facie at least a total failure, purchaser was not entitled to recover the entire purchase price for partial failure without offering to return the land.—Alger-Sullivan Lumber Co. v. Union Trust Co., supra.

Placing covenantor in statu quo

Recovery or abatement of entire purchase price, title having partially failed, can only be allowed grantee on rescission and returning of covenantor to statu quo.—Lost Creek Coal & Mineral Land Co. v. Hendon, 110 So. 308, 215 Ala. 212.

Rescission as result rather than condition precedent

In an action by a purchaser on a covenant as to the quality of soil with agreement to return contract price if the soil was not as warranted, resulting rescission of the contract is necessarily implied to prevent vendee from getting back his money and keeping the land, but such a rescission is not a condition precedent to the vendee's right to recover the purchase price, but is a result flowing therefrom, and failure of plaintiff to restore possession or to tender it prior to commencement of suit is not fatal to plaintiff's right of recovery on the warranty, since the court in its decree will impose such conditions for defendant's protection as may be just, in view of Comp.St. § 6411.—*Wilson v. Statutory provisions

Gen.L. c 184 § 22, making the grantor in a deed with a covenant against encumbrances liable for all damages sustained by the grantee, his successors or assigns, in removing any actual or apparent encumbrances appearing from any public record, by its plain words, applies only where the encumbrances have been removed by the party seeking to recover.—Gallison v. Downing, 138 N.E. 315, 244 Mass. 33.

Taxes

By way of dictum, it has been said in a case involving different facts, that in an action founded on a covenant against encumbrances in a deed to recover the amount of taxes paid by a grantee or a remote grantee, the covenant would be considered one of indemnity, and payment would be prerequisite to recovery of more than nominal damages.—*Brinton v. c. Mutual and Concurrent Covenants

In the case of mutual and concurrent covenants, performance or tender thereof by one party is ordinarily a condition precedent to suit against the other.

In cases of mutual concurrent covenants, where the acts to be done are simultaneous, neither party can maintain an action for a failure on the part of the other without showing a performance or a tender of performance on his own part,⁸⁷ although it has been held that, where the covenant of each, and not the expected performance, is the consideration, each may recover without showing performance on his part.⁸⁸

Ordinarily, an intermediate grantee cannot recover for breach of covenant unless he has first paid or otherwise sustained damages in connection therewith.

Although there is some early authority to the contrary,⁸⁹ the general rule is that an intermediate grantee cannot maintain an action against his immediate or remote grantor until he has been damaged, that is, has either been evicted or compelled to pay damages on his own covenant, or has paid off and satisfied his obligations,⁹⁰ unless the suit is brought in the name of the intermediate grantee for the benefit of the person evicted.⁹¹

e. Waiver of Conditions

Conditions precedent to maintenance of a suit for breach of covenant may be waived.

A person entitled to avail himself of a condition precedent who waives it by a denial of plaintiff's right of action for the breach,⁹² or by proceeding to fulfill on his part,⁹³ cannot plead it in bar of an action on the covenant for negligent performance on his part.

§ 118. Defenses

A valid defense to a suit for breach of covenant may lie in the lack of a good cause of action in plaintiff or in some matter precluding his maintenance of the suit, such as estoppel, fraud, or mistake.

Broadly speaking, one sued for breach of covenant may interpose as a valid defense anything militating against the existence of the cause of action or the right to maintain it,⁹⁴ and matters which do neither will not constitute proper defenses.⁹⁵ The covenantor's own wrongful acts or neglect,⁹⁶ or his ignorance of law,⁹⁷ afford no defense in an action for breach of covenant, nor does the fact that another was liable with the covenantor.⁹⁸ Where the alleged breach is as to shortage of acreage, it is no defense that the sale was not by the acre but in gross,⁹⁹ and where the purchase was by subdivisions and not by acreage, that there was an excess acreage in some subdivisions to balance complete loss of other subdivisions through failure of title affords no defense.¹ The covenantor may interpose any defense against the grantee that he may have against another who is the real party in interest,² and a defense valid against immediate Necessity of eviction to constitute breach see supra § 112.

Proof of eviction

In action for breach of warranty of title, a suit against plaintiff to restrain him from interfering with a drain was not available to prove an eviction when instituted after the institution of the action for breach of warranty. Nothing short of a final decree in suits to enjoin an alleged violation of building restrictions and an interference with a drain would constitute an eviction and authorize an action for breach of warranty of title, and hence, where such final decrees were entered long after the action for breach of warranty was brought, there was no proof of eviction.—*Gallison v.
